GERMANY'S REPUBLIC SHAKES IN LANDSLIDE OF RADICAL BALLOTS

Fascist and Communist Parties Control 176 Reichstag Seats.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS STILL OUTSTANDING

Two Killed, 500 Arrested in Bitter Clashes Before Election.

GOVERNMENT LEFT COALITION LOOPHOLE

Chancellor Bruening Again Elected, but Power Is Endangered.

Berlin, Sept. 15 (Monday) (A.P.).—A landslide of Fascist and Communist votes in the Reichstag general election, the sixth since the foundation of the republic, this morning shook the foundations of the parliamentary government in Germany and threatened the life of Chancellor Heinrich Bruening's government.

The two parties advocating overthrow of the young German republic were shown by return early today to have outstripped virtually all other parties except the Social-Democrats and to control at least 176 seats in the next Reichstag.

Complete figures for 27 out of 35 electoral districts assured 137 seats to the Social-Democrats, strongest party in the last Reichstag, 101 seats to the Fascists, 75 to the Communists, 64 to the Centrists, Chancellor Bruening's party; 38 to the Nationalists and 27 to the People's party.

Facists Are Sensation.

The sensation of the election has been the dizzying rise of the Fascists from 12 seats to 101. Adolf Hitler, Austrian aauthor of the famous Munich Putsch in 1923, has become overnight a political power of the first rank in Germany.

Though by his birth prevented from sitting in the Reichstag, the young Austrian—he is only 41—will lead the second largest party in the Reichstag, instead of a mere negligible fraction.

As had been widely predicted, both extremist parties gained heavily at the expense of the borgeoise groups. The Communists rose from 54 to 75, scoring a particularly heavy vote in Berlin, where they led all parties.

Nationalists Severely Defeated.

The Nationalists suffered a severe defeat, dropping from 78 to 38 and ceding their position of second strongest in the Reichstag. Alfred Hugenberg's forces lost chiefly to Hitler's Fascists.

Of the great parties in the last Reichstag, only the Social-Democrats held their ground. They loomed today as the dominating force in any future government combination.

Observers had little doubt that efforts would be made to build up a new coalition and that the Bruening government as now constituted would be brushed aside.

Offers One Loophole.

The loophole for the government is the new coalition, in which as under Mueller the Social-Democrats would be included. Chancellor Bruening and Premier Otto Braun, of Prussia, have been careful throughout the campaign to leave at least a way open for such a coalition.

The present Bruening government, from which the Social-Democrats have stood aside, has been put in an extremely precarious position by losses among its chief supporters.

By 1:30 a. m. more than 33,000,000 votes had been counted. The Social-Democrats led with 8,223,286.

Fascists Poll 6,064,023

They were followed by the Fascists with 6,064,023, Communists, 4,532,286; Centrists, 3,874,468; Nationalists, 2,322,750; People's Party, 1,869,582; Economic, 1,299,118; States Party, 1,165,403; Farmers' League, 1,058,710; Bavarians, 999,006; Conservatives, 305,281; scattered, 2,132,593.

The Saxon district of Leipsic, embracing about one-third of Saxony, gave the Fascists eight times as many votes as at the previous election. This was the first of the 35 electoral districts of Germany to complete its returns.

It gave the Social-Democrats 288,000 votes, the Communists 142,000, the Fascists 116,000, and the People's Party 78,000. The Nationalists and others lost heavily.

Bruening Is Reelected.

Among prominent political persons elected to the Reichstag today were Chancellor Heinrich Bruening and several other cabinet members. Foreign Minister Julius Curtius, though unable to leave Geneva to cast his vote, was reelected.

Hermann Mueller, former Social-Democratic chancellor, was reelected, together with Premier Otto Braun of Prussia, Rudolf Breitscheid, Philip Scheidemann and Carl Severing, all prominent Social-Democrats.

Finance Minister Hermann Dietrich, of the States Party; Mgr. Ludwig

Calvin Coolidge

Says: The financial strength of the United States has just been demonstrated by the eagerness of the public to invest about a billion and a quarter dollars in two and three-eighths per cent Treasury notes. The offering was nearly four times oversubscribed. Our great increase in wealth and ready money is indicated by the ease with which this was done compared with the tremendous effort required thirteen years ago to sell two billions of three and a half per cent Liberty loan bonds.

Now it is proposed to retire in March about eleven hundred and fifty million of three and a half per cent notes. If they can be replaced at two and a half per cent, the saving will be eleven and one-half millions each year.

No other government in the world was ever able to raise such large sums at such low rates. The credit of the United States commands confidence.

An enormous amount of capital wants to go to work. It is the chief of all the unemployed. With a safe master it will accept very low wages. Usually, plenty of money and plenty of people willing to work have produced commercial activity. The business of the country merits more confidence.

SLEEP-WALKER DIES IN FALL TO STREET

DROPS THREE STORIES

Manuel Gonzalez Revilla, 26 years old, son of a prominent physician of Panama and a medical student at Georgetown University, was killed early yesterday morning by a fall from his third-floor apartment at the Franklin Park, 1332 I street northwest. The fall was apparently the result of sleepwalking.

Revilla was found in an unconscious condition in an alley by a colored elevator operator, who heard the groans of the injured man. The operator, Thomas Jefferson Crumbles, of 1004 O street northwest, called an ambulance and notified other occupants of the building.

Revilla died three hours after being taken to Emergency Hospital of cerebral hemorrhage and a fractured skull. He did not regain consciousness.

Police were called when the Emergency ambulance did not respond and the man was taken to the hospital in the patrol wagon of the First Precinct station.

Julian B. Chevalier, secretary of the Panama Legation, was called to the hospital. He took charge of the body and will notify the parents of the boy.

Gabriel Velazquez, roommate of the dead man, said that Revilla was a somnambulist, and the theory that he might have beep walking in his sleep was strengthened by finding a sheet clutched in the man's hand. He was nude when found. Velazquez was asleep in their room when Revilla's body was discovered and said that he had not heard the youth leave the room.

Acting Coroner Joseph D. Rogers issued a certificate of accidental death after viewing the body, which

PECK LIQUOR KNOWN TO COMMISSIONERS

Captain's Retirement Plea Requested, Received and Granted Same Day.

ENDS CASE, SAYS CROSBY

Retirement of Capt. Charles T. Peck from the Police Department after 36 years of service was "recommended" by the District Commissioners with a full knowledge that liquor had been discovered in the captain's locker at the Eleventh Precinct, Commissioner Herbert B. Crosby said last night.

Discovery of the liquor was made by two of Capt. Peck's superior officers about two weeks ago, but no public announcement of the fact ever had been made until the story was published in The Post yesterday.

After the circumstances had been reported to him, Gen. Crosby said last night, he told Maj. Henry G. Pratt, superintendent of police, to request Capt. Peck's application for retirement, which was received, considered and acted upon by the Commissioners all on the same day.

This procedure was adopted, Gen. Crosby said, because of Capt. Peck's previous excellent record. Under the circumstances it was deemed preferable to permit the captain to resign rather than subject him to Police Trial Board action after so long a career of exemplary service.

Gen. Crosby volunteered the statement that the story behind Capt. Peck's retirement, as published in The Post yesterday, was correct in all details, and added that the case now was closed. Capt. Peck's resignation becomes effective today, and carries with it a pension of $150 monthly.

Control of liquor, gambling and vice law violations now has been taken from the precinct commanders and various independent squads and vested in a central detail under the

Understanding Is Stressed By Morrow as Aid to Peace

Ambassador, Nearing End of Stay in Mexico, Pleads for Recognition of Others' Rights in Address Broadcast From New York.

New York, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—A plea for sympathetic understanding between nations was voiced tonight by Ambassador Dwight W. Morrrw in a radio speech from Mexico City. The address was brought to New York by wire and broadcast by the National Broadcasting System.

Referring to the fact that it was his last Sunday evening in Mexico, Mr. Morrow praised the charm of the country and its people. He then spoke of the improvement in the means of communication between the two nations, but said:

"It is too often assumed that scientific inventions prevent misunderstandings. Machines, however, do not understand each other. Man may make a perfect machine, but it will still depend upon man himself whether the machine shall be an instrument of understanding of misunderstanding.

"If we could all get clearly into our minds that other men have as much pride i nthe dignity of their nations as we have in our own, the solution of international problems would be less difficult."

He declared it the duty of a diplomat to defend the proper interests of his country, but "we can best defend the rights of our own country when we understand the rights of other countries."

It has been said, he went on, that the essential thing in a foreign country is to try to understand how foreigners differ from ourselves, but after three years "it seems to us the essential thing * * * is to study the likenesses of men rather than their differences."

"In the profound experiences of life," said Mr. Morrow, "all men and women are very much alike, and it is this fundamental similarity which enables us to understand other men and to live in peace and friendship with them."

MONEY SHARKS' TACTICS ALIKE, SURVEY SHOWS

Successful Client Gets $100, Paying Back $140 in 20 Weeks.

OFFICES FURNISHED CHEAPLY; NO PHONES

Companies Ask Names of Prospect's Parents; Insist on Many References.

By AUSTIN T. ROGERS.

It was suggested here yesterday that there are in Washington numerous gentry who make it their business to lend money to salaried workers, demanding a mere $40 profit per $100 for the use of their funds over a period of twenty weeks.

It was shown that at the end of the fifteenth week the borrower has paid back the entire principal plus interest at the rate of 255 per cent, and he still owes the loan shark $35, so that by the end of the twentieth week he has paid interest at the rate of 933 per cent.

These financial wizards, incidentally, are by no means the suave, polished swindlers of modern fiction.

Office Simply Furnished.

Simulating a dire need which was not altogether feigned, the reporter climbed up a flight to the second floor of a dingy, fifth-rate office building in the downtown section and entered an office which bore on its door a sign announcing the presence of a loan "company" with a most impressive title.

The office consisted of a single room containing two desks and three chairs. There was no telephone. The furnishings were such that it was apparent the occupants would experience no great financial loss if it should become advisable for them to vacate the premises suddenly in an emergency.

Seated at one desk facing the door was a heavy set personage, obviously averse to putting too much wear and tear on his razor blades, and equally obviously conservative in the matter of laundry bills.

"Are You Working?"

He seemed quite busy studying the contents of a card index, while the reporter stood nervously fidgeting in what he knew from experience to be the proper demeanor of one about to apply for a loan. But as time passed, and he had an opportunity to study the lender, the reporter could not repress a growing conviction that he had wandered into the wrong office by mistake; that this instead must be the place one goes to when one wants to engage a competent rodman to put an enemy on the spot and take him for a ride.

At length, however, the man at the desk looked up.

"Well," he demanded, "what could I do for you?"

"I need $100," the reporter replied truthfully. "Can I get it here?"

"Maybe," replied the lender. "Are you working?"

"Sure," replied the reporter, "I'm a writer; you know, magazine stories, and that sort of stuff."

Authors Are Scorned.

"Do you get a salary for that?" the beetle-browed person inquired.

"No," was the response. "You see, every time I write a story I get a check—if I sell the story."

"Well, we can't do no business then," he was informed. "If you want to borrow money here, you got to be earning a salary."

The lender returned to his perusal of the card index, and that was that.

Next on the reporter's list was a place just around the corner. In layout and decoration the office was

U. S. AVIATORS ATTEMPTING PACIFIC FLIGHT RETURN TO JAPAN AFTER FIGHTING FOG

Bromley and Gatty Land Only Few Miles From Take-Off Point.

PROGRESS OVER SEA THWARTED BY MIST

News of Landing Is Rirst Definite Word of Pair in Many Hours.

WENT 1,200 MILES, ONE VESSEL HEARS

Promises of Good Weather Made at Start Prove to Be Unreliable.

Tokyo (Monday), Sept. 15 (A.P.).—Harold Bromley and Harold Gatty American aviators, turned back from their projected nonstop transpacific flight and landed at 6 a. m. today near the village of Shiritsuka, on Cape Shiriya, Aomori prefecture, only a few miles from the point where their flight started. Both fliers were safe.

San Francisco, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—The Dollar liner President Taft, in Yokohama harbor, Japan, reported to the Mussel Rock station of the company here late today that the Ochiishi, Japanese government radio of Hokkaido Island, intercepted a message from the monoplane City of Tacoma at 5:10 p. m. Sunday (12:10 a. m. P. S. T.) saying the plane was "proceeding 230 magnetic in dense fog and apparently in trouble."

The President Taft told the Mussel Rock station this location meant the plane was heading southwest or returning to Japan.

"The report would place Bromley about 1,200 miles at sea," the President Taft's report said.

Fly Through Heavy Fog.

Tokyo, Monday, Sept. 15 (A.P.).—Fog, darkness and the silence of the northwest Pacific Ocean early today kept secret the progress of Harold Bromley, American aviator, and his copilot and navigator, Harold Gatty, on their 4,500-mile flight over the Pacific Ocean to Tacoma, Wash.

The latest trustworthy information here, received at the Ochiishi wireless station on Hokkaido Island at 3:30 p. m. Sunday (10:30 p. m. Saturday, P. S. T.) said the big vermillion monoplane, City of Tacoma, passed over Chirihoi, also called the Black Brothers, a small island 50 miles northeast of Urup Island, in the Kurile chain. Chirihoi is approximately 650 miles northeast of Samishiro Beach, where the two started their flight at 5:08 a. m. yesterday (12:08 p. m. Saturday, P. S. T.).

Since then government stations have heard nothing from the plane. Alarming reports that Bromley was calling for assistance, published in newspaper extras in Tokyo and Osaka, proved baseless. The optimistic account that the plane had reached the lower tip of the Siberian Peninsula, Kamchatka, at 4 p. m. Sunday (11 p. m. Saturday, P. S. T.) also appeared unfounded.

Heavy Rains Reported.

Near Midland the wireless station at Ochiishi reported it had not heard from the fliers. The Paramushiru wireless station reported heavy rains over the northern Kuriles and said it had queried fishing and crab-canning fleets around the southern end of Kamchatka, but failed to elicit any news of the plane.

It is certain, however, the roseate weather promises with which the fliers started yesterday from Samishiro Beach were unfulfilled. The plane flew almost blind through dense fog over the lower Kuriles, while reports from the Aleutian Islands indicated similar conditions lay ahead of the fliers. Slowness of early stages of the flight showed the margin of safety in the fuel supply also was smaller than was hoped.

The City of Tacoma's radio range was known to be limited and the Ex Parte Hearings Held by Attorney Spates, Campbell Says.

Eighth of a series of articles by the former prohibition administrator of the Eastern New York district.

By MAJ. MAURICE CAMPBELL.

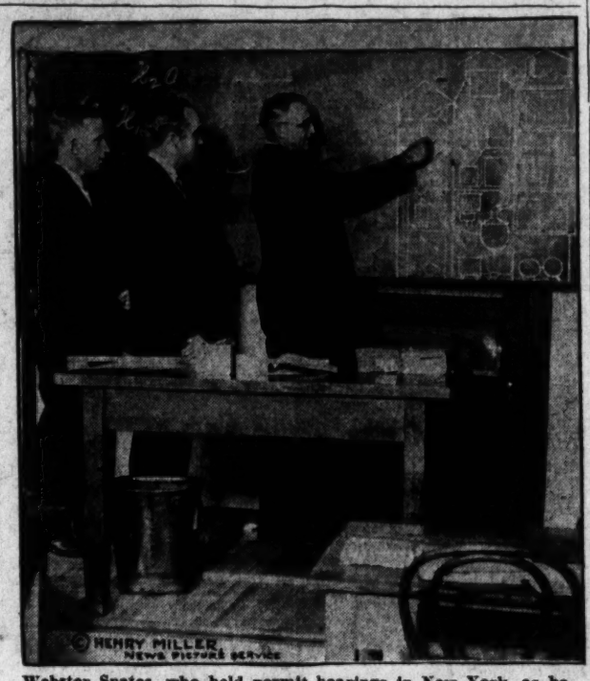

I finally stopped both the Curatone Co. and the American Denaturing Co., which had the backing of Senator Curtis' New York campaign managers, from withdrawing whisky and alcohol—but not without another serious clash with Prohibition Commissioner James M. Doran's office, in which the bureau apparently preferred to believe the whitewashing testimony of these dubious permitees—without c r o s s-examination—rather than the reports of my most trustworthy investigators.

Dr. Doran—who said he would "hate to have Senator Curtis on my tail"—suggested sending Webster Spates, an attorney from the bureau, to look into the matters, and I consented.

In a day or so I received a letter from Doran informing me that he had assigned Spates to hold hearings in my office on the American Denaturing, the Curatone and the Strictly Kosher Wine Co. cases. On November 8, 1928, he telephoned from Washington and asked if I was satisfied with the letter. I said I guessed it was all right, though I had not understood that the Strictly Kosher Wine case was to be included.

Dr. Doran said this was merely perfunctory and might just as

GIRL SLASHED DEAD BY PORCH-CLIMBER

South Bend Youth Object of Hunt After Mother Discovers Body.

GREAT CROWD GATHERS

South Bend, Ind., Sept. 14 (A.P.).—Alice Waltman, 17, school girl, was slashed to death in her home early today. The razor-wielding assailant, after nearly decapitating his victim, leaped from a second-story bedroom window and escaped.

An 8-year-old brother, Richard, who slept at the girl's side, was not awakened, nor were two sisters, Henrietta, 20, and Evelyn, 19, in another bed in the same room. Mrs. Kate Waltman, Alice's mother, discovered the crime. Hearing the body thump to the floor, she rushed upstairs, where she was confronted by the mutilated body of her child.

Believing the killing may have been done by a rejected suitor, police tonight announced they were seeking William Myrick, an itinerant workman, who kept company with the girl for several weeks about two months ago.

To reach Alice's bed the slayer climbed a rear porch, crept through a bedroom in which her brothers, Harry, 14, and Henry, 15, were asleep, stepped into a hall, entered another bedroom, and passed to the victim's bed. Then, after accomplishing his task, he left as he had entered. This fact was demonstrated by dirty finger impressions made in entering and bloody ones as he left.

Citizens of South Bend, nerves on edge because of the recent kidnaping and fiendish murder of 8-year-old Mavarine Appel, were thrown into a state of intense excitement as word of the slaying gained circulation.

A great crowd gathered in front of the Waltman home, milling about excitedly. The density of the gathering and the high state of feeling manifest caused apprehensive police to call out riot squads. Considerable difficulty was experienced in clearing the streets.

Brooklyn Regains Lead In National League Race

The Brooklyn Robins returned to first place yesterday in the hectic National League pennant race by defeating the Cincinnati Reds while the St. Louis Cardinals divided two games with the Boston Braves and the Chicago Cubs were idle. The line-up this morning shows the Robins one-half game ahead of the Cardinals, one full game in front of the Cubs and five and one-half games ahead of the fourth-place New York Giants, whose hopes were struck a terrific blow by a double loss at the hands of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The Nats all but fell out of the American League race by losing to the White Sox while the Athletics defeated the Indians. The Nats trail now by seven and one-half games.

Stedman's Condition Reported Unchanged

Maj. Charles M. Stedman, 89-year-old representative from the Fifth North Carolina District, lay in a condition reported as unchanged in Mount Alto Hospital last night after suffering a stroke of apoplexy last Tuesday. His condition continued grave, and while he may linger for several days or longer, belief prevailed that the end was near.

The last Civil War veteran in Congress and possibly with the exception only of the late "Uncle Joe" Cannon, of Illinois, the oldest man ever to occupy a seat there, Maj. Stedman is a figure of national promihence and one of the few men who the House has regularly honored.

$100,000 OF STOLEN BONDS FOUND IN RAID

Member of Huge Bandit Gang Killed in Resisting Kansas Police.

LEADER UNDER ARREST

Kansas City, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—Police killed one man and seized Liberty bonds and money orders valued at more than $100,000 in a raid today in what they described as a safe blowers' rendezvous.

Frank Reliser, 37, the leader, officers said, of a gang whose activities, veiled by a photograph enlargement business, extended from Iowa to Colorado, and Mrs. Meida Graham, 37, his companion, were arrested.

B. H. Thurman, chief of detectives, said evidence in the Relisers' residence definitely linked the band with robberies in Stilwell, Kans., and Frederick and Central City, Colo.

Reliser, who has served three prison terms, refused to identify the slain man shot down by detectives when he resisted arrest on his arrival at the house.

The raid was made on information from officers in Topeka, where Ray Sawyer and J. A. Haynes, alleged members of the gang, were arrested yesterday.

Liberty bonds valued at $8,300 were identified as part of the loot from the Stilwell State Bank, robbed about two weeks ago. At Stilwell the robbers abandoned a car bearing an Iowa license. Chief Thurman said the gang apparently had operated about Sioux City.

Unidentified Man Killed As Stolen Car Overturns

Companion Breaks Leg in Leap From Hospital Window in Attempt to Escape Questioning; Victim Believed Washington Resident.

An unidentified man, believed to be a resident of Washington, was killed yesterday in a crash that ended the theft of an automobile in Baltimore and was marked by the arrest of another occupant of the machine who broke a leg in a leap from a window at the John Hopkins Hospital in an attempted escape.

Robert Combs, 19 years old, of Littleton, W. Va., is the man held by Maryland State police for investigation. He is alleged to have stolen an automobile owned by James W. Ryon, of 2808 Thirty-fourth place northwest, who was in Baltimore yesterday to visit friends.

Combs told police that he met his companion in Washington several days ago and had known him only as "John." He refused to say whether they had stolen the car and was reluctant to answer questions. He would not amplify his partial identification of the dead man.

The accident occurred on the Philadelphia road near Sunshine avenue, on the outskirts of Baltimore. Combs and Private George Higgins, a soldier attached to Fort George Mead, Md., were taken from the wreckage.

Combs tried to escape as he was being brought to the hospital. When he was taken to the emergency room in the institution he leaped from a window as physicians were preparing to dress his injuries. He broke his leg in the jump and was recaptured.

Private Higgins, who was released by police, told authorities that he had obtained a ride from the men while hitch hiking back to his reservation. As the machine sped down the highway, he said, Combs, who was driving, lost control of the machine, and it overturned. When arrested, Combs at first refused to reveal his identity and told conflicting stories, according to Patrolman Gilbert Wolenberg, of the Maryland State police.

The dead man is described as 38 years old, is 6 feet in height, and weighs about 190 pounds.

Mr. Byon had not returned home late last night. It was learned that he had gone to Baltimore yesterday to visit friends and had called home a few horus after the accident.

fliers are not expert radio men. The higher islands of the Kuriles chain are sparsely populated and few ships carrying radios frequent those waters. If the two are still in the air, they should have left Japanese territory slightly before midnight and be heading eastward over the 700 miles of open water toward the western Aleutian Islands.

Coast Awaits Word.

San Francisco, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—Dozens of Pacific Coast wireless stations and ships at sea were tuned in on a wave length of 34.7 meters today in an effort to intercept signals from the monoplane City of Tacoma, in which Harold Bromley and Harold Gatty, American aviators, took off, on a nonstop transpacific flight.

The Mussel Rock station of the Dollar Steamship Co. at San Francisco said the liners President McKinley and President Cleveland, somewhere between the Kuriles Islands, northeast of Japan and the Aleutians, estimated they were each within 300 miles of where the monoplane should have been if still aloft. Neither vessel had heard a signal.

Both the Dollar Line radio at San Francisco and the Associated Press correspondent at Tokyo reported the liner President Taft, nearing Yokohama, Japan, at 5:10 p. m. (P. S. T.) picked up a message from the City of Takoma, saying the plane was in a dense fog over the Kuriles chain.

The Mussel Rock station here said the steamship President McKinley was in communication shortly after noon, (P. S. T.), with the St. Paul Island Coast Guard wireless station in the Bering Sea and quoted the St. Paul Station as denying having received a message from the City of Tacoma saying, "All well; 1,700 miles from starting point," as previously reported.

TREASURY TO HAVE BILLION-DOLLAR DAY

$500,000,000 in Income Tax Flow Largest Item on Today's Program.

DEBT WILL BE REDUCED

(Associated Press.)

More than $1,000,000,000 will flow in and out of the Treasury today in the regular quarterly financing transactions of the Government.

The third quarter of this year's income taxes are due today and collections of about $500,000,000 are estimated to be in prospect. The large portion of income taxes were paid, however, during the first quarter.

The new Treasury offering of $334,000,000 in certificates bearing 2¾ per cent will be issued. The certificates will mature a year hence. This is the lowest interest rate obtained by the Government on any of its securities.

At the same time Secretary Mellon will retire $351,000,000 in Treasury certificates bearing 3¼ per cent which mtaure today; redeem $50,900,000 in Treasury bills and make a payment of $35,000,000 in interest on the public debt.

All in all, it will be a busy day at the Government tills wit hthe net result being another reduction, although slight comparatively, in the outstanding public debt of the Nation.

Although the Government offered only 2¾ per cent for its money this quarter, the issue of these certificates was oversubscribed by almost four to one. This has encouraged Mr. Mellon to call in more than a billion dollars in Treasury certificates next March 15, in the belief that he can replace these notes bearing 3½ per cent interest with others of lower interest rates.

VOTES OF RADICALS THREATEN REPUBLIC

Kaas, Centrist leader in the Reichstag; Minister of Labor Adam Stegerwald and Minister of Agriculture Martin Chiele were also reelected. Clara Zetkin and Ernst Thaelmann, two of the most noteworthy Communist leaders, were reelected.

Bitter oppositoin to the republic was the mainspring that sent Fascist and Communist votera to the polls. The gains of either party were in effect expected to be a threat to parliamentary government.

Fascists and Reds Clash.

Meanwhile their own rivalry provoked numerous clashes in Berlin and the provinces during the night.

A truck load of Fascists passing Communists headquarters in the Buelow Platz was stoned by a crowd of Communists. Shots followed and then a general melee.

The emergency force of police had to be called out to suppress the riot and made 170 arrests. A bystander and a workman were killed.

Other clashes and preventive arrests swelled the number of election prisoners at the police stations to 500, up to late afternoon.

Steins Litter Battlefield.

Broken beer steins and fragments of furniture littered the nation-wide battlefield on which today's candidates fought their way toward new seats in the Reichstag.

Crash Hurts Fatal To Capital Youth

Cousin Still Is in Serious Condition After Wreck in New Jersey.

Frederick McBride, 19 years old, of 2804 Fourteenth street northwest, who was injured in an autoaccident near Vineland, N. J., Saturday, died yesterday in a Vineland hospital, according to an Associated Press dispatch from that town.

Miss Madge DeGrummond, cousin of the dead youth, who was riding in the car, is still in a serious condition. She has a fractured jaw, lacerations of the face and possible internal injuries. Miss DeGrummond, who lives in the Canal Zone, had been visiting friends here and was on her way to Simons College in Boston when the crash occurred. A third passenger, Mrs. Elizabeth Robb, aunt of the other two, suffered lacerations of the tongue and a possible fractured knee. Mrs. Robb lives at the Rochambeau apartments.

The three, riding in a car which belonged to Mrs. Robb and was driven by McBride, overturned after a collision with a car driven by E. O. Tweed, of Germantown, Pa. Tweed was arrested and released on $2,000 bond, pending the outcome of the youth's injuries.

PRIMARY BATTLES TO END THIS WEEK

Five States Will Decide Party Choices as Final Election Nears.

DRY ISSUE LOOMS BIG

(Associated Press.)

Selection of party candidates by five States this week will bring the primary campaigns to an end and send the off-year political drive into its final stages.

Tomorow, seven weeks to the day from the general election which will decide whether the Republicans are to retain their control of Congress, the voters in New York, Massachusetts and Wisconsin will drop the names of their party selections into primary ballot boxes. On the same day Connecticut Republicans and Delaware Democrats will hold nominating conventions.

Prohibition has figured largely in the only senatorial campaigns, those in Massachusetts and Delaware. In Massachusetts, Wisconsin and Connecticut there are gubernatorial contests. New York will select only the candidates for House seats, which every State is being called upon to choose.

Eight Seek Bay State Seat.

In Massachusetts, three Republicans and five Democrats are seeking the nomination for the senatorship to be vacated by Frederick H. Gillett, a Republican. The Republicans are William M. Butler, a former chairman of the national committee; Eben S. Draper, a former State senator, and Andrew J. (Bossy) Gillis, Mayor of Newburyport. The Democrats are Marcus A. Coolidge, a former Mayor of Fitchburg; Eugene N. Foss, a former governor; Peter J. Joyce, a manufacturer; Thomas C. O'Brien, a former district attorney, and Joseph F. O'Connell, a former representative.

Butler and Foss are drys, Draper and Coolidge are wets, and Gillis styled himself as "moist." In one of the congressional races also, Representative A. Piatt Andrew, a wet, was opposed by Mrs. Martha N. Brookings, a dry.

Former Senator Thomas F. Bayard, a wet, and Josiah Marvel, national committeeman, backed by the drys, have contested for the Democratic senatorial nomination in Delaware. The winner will oppose Senator Daniel O. Hastings, who has been renominated by the Republicans.

Two Republican and three Democratic names will be balloted on for the Massachusetts gubernatorial nomination. The Republicans are Gov. Frank G. Allen, who seeks a second term, and former Mayor John D. Devir, of Malden. The Democrats are Joseph B. Ely, of Westfield, a former district attorney; John J. Cummings, of Boston, and former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald, of Boston. Fitzgerald has withdrawn because of illness, but his name still remains on the ballot.

La Follette and Kohler Fighting.

Wisconsin has been more interested in the fight of Phillip F. La Follette, a brother of Senator Robert La Follette, with Walter J. Kohler, the millionaire incumbent, for the governorship than it has in the biennial congressional contests. Chain stores, chain banks and public utilities have furnished material for their verbal tilts.

The names of Lieut. Gov. Ernest E. Rogers and Gov. J. H. Trumbull were mentioned as those to which the Connecticut Republicans might turn in their choice of a candidate to succeed Trumbull. State Senator Edward W. Goss, a wet, was considered the probable selection for the House vacancy from the Fifth District caused by the death of Representative James P. Glynn.

Few important contests were before the New York voters. Representative Ruth Baker Pratt was opposed for the Republican nomination in the Seventh District by George Hiram Mann, of Brooklyn. The winner would be opposed by Louis B. Brodsky, a Democrat, and Heywood Broun, Socialist.

In preparation for the meeting of the American Jewish Congress to be held in Washington October 19 and 20, a conference representing various Jewish organizations here will be held tonight at the Jewish Community Center.

He is making the trip for the sole purpose of delivering an address on the Palestine question on the basis of a minority report he made as a member of the commission in which he strongly urged restoration of the Jewish national homeland in Palestine.

THIRD MAN SOUGHT IN DE PRIEST PLOT

One of Two Prisoners Said by Police to Confess Extortion Plan.

POLITICAL ANGLE SEEN

Chicago, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—Two men, arrested last night on charges of having attempted to extort $10,000 from Representative Oscar de Priest, Negro representative, will be recommended for indictment tomorrow by the September grand jury.

One of the men, Solly Lason, was said by police to have confessed his part in the plot to extort the money from the representative under threat of death and to have named Julius Link, a minor politician in De Priest's district, as a partner in the scheme. Detectives also hunted Joe Gladstone, named by Lason as a confederate.

Ran Against DePriest.

Police later said they had learned "Gladstone" was, in reality, Joseph Goldstein, minor racketeer, who formerly was closely alliated with Aaron Moshick, known, the authorities said, as a master forger, who is now believed to be in New York. They recalled, too, that Link ran for State representative on the anti-DePriest ticket in the spring primary, and was defeated. Lazen was an unsuccessful candidate for a minor ward office.

The Tribune said tonight that while he was being questioned, Link stubbornly insisted he knew nothing of the plot and then suddenly turned on DePriest and shouted:

"You've got all the patronage in the district. I'm broke. I'm starving to death!"

De Priest received a letter last Wednesday to the effect the writers had been offered $5,000 to assassinate him. The note said De Priest's "enemies in Alabama" had commissioned them for the killing, but, if he would deliver $10,000 in easily negotiable bills, they would not execute the plot.

Money Hidden in Shed.

De Priest took the document to Robert I. Randolph, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce and chairman of the "Secret Six" crime investigating committee. Working also with Walter Walker, attorney for the employers' association, the Representative complied with the blackmailers' demands to signify his assent by running a notice in the personal column of a newspaper.

Instructed where to place the money, De Priest went by a devious route to a previously designated shed Friday and slipped a package containing $200 in marked bills under the door. Detectives, dressed in rough clothing, hovered in the vicinity until Saturday morning, when Lason, a milk truck driver, picked up the parcel. A sedan bearing three men convoyed Lason's truck through the streets.

Officers, tracing the license numbers, arrested Link and later took Lason into custody. After they had found marked bills on his person, police said, Lason confessed and named his confederates.

Cumming, of the United States Public Health Service, and Dr. William Gerry Morgan, president of the American Medical Association, are to receive honorary degrees from the University of Pennsylvania October 10, when a two-day cleebration of progress in medicine at the university will be formally opened with a convocation on the university campus.

Other Americans to be honored are Dr. William H. Welch, of Johns Hopkins University; Dr. J. Ramsey Hunt, of Columbia University; Dr. Alonzo E. Taylor, of Leland Stanford University, and Dr. Alfred E. Stengel, of the University of Pennsylvania.

At the same time the university will also confer honorary degrees upon Sir William M. Fletcher, of London, secretary of the Research Council of Great Britain, and Prof. A. V. Hill, of the Institute of Psychology, University College, London.

Lions Will Hear Blind Director

Training of Dogs to Guide Sightless Persons Will Be Described.

Under the auspices of the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind, Morris S. Frank, blind managing director of the "Seeing Eye," which trains dogs for the guidance of the blind, will give a talk before the Lions Club at the Mayflower Hotel Wednesday.

Arrangements for the appearance of Mr. Frank before the Lions Club were made by Ralph H. Campbell, executive secretary of the Polytechnic Institute, and Mr. Campbell has also arranged for several other appearances of Mr. Frank and his dog, Buddy.

While considerable progress in training dogs as an aid to the blind has been made abroad, "The Seeing Eye," located in Nashville, Tenn., is the only institution of its kind in the country. The German shepherd dog has been found best suited for the task and is being used exclusively.

MINOR THIEVES BUSY DURING WEEK-END

BURGLAR GETS 85 CENTS

A number of robberies were reported to police over the week-end. Guy M. Hooks, of the London Hall Apartments, at Thirteenth and M streets, told police that a money box containing about $250 and two checks was taken from the offices of the Union Paving Co. in the Tower Building at Fourteenth and K streets. Entrance was gained by breaking a transom.

A group of young colored men grabbed him near Four-and-a-half and F streets southwest and took $4.75. Robert Louis Groves, of 1311 Seventh street, told police. Twenty dollars was taken from Eules Isley, of 1415 Q street northwest, while he was in a house near Second and Canal streets, according to a report he made.

Only 85 cents was gained by a colored man who entered an apartment in the building at 1832 Biltmore street northwest by a side window. He was frightened off before he could get more by James R. Gannon, who lives in the apartment.

Three hundred pennies were taken by a thief who entered a store at 1300 D street southeast by an open side door, Louis B. Blumberg, of that address, told police.

Thefts of clothing were reported by both Samuel J. Hamilton, of 1412½ Duncan street northeast, and Clifton Campbell, of 922 Fifth street southeast. Hamilton said that a suit valued at $20 and papers were stolen from his locker at Harvey's restaurant. Campbell reported that two suits were stolen from him. They were taken from the janitor's quarters at 1449 Oak street northwest.

Boyd Harbor Grace Hop Balked by Bad Weather

Charlottetown, P. E. I., Sept. 14. (A.P.).—Capt. Erroll Boyd and Lieut. Harry Connor, who planned to fly to Harbor Grace today to complete the first lap of a proposed transatlantic flight from Montreal to London, postponed their departure because of unfavorable weather conditions.

The two fliers landed at Tea Hill, 5 miles from here, early last night after head winds and a low ceiling had so delayed them after their departure from Montreal that they would have been forced to make a late night landing at Harbor Grace. They turned back over Cape Breton.

MICHIGAN G.O.P. HIT BY DANGEROUS SPLIT

Contest in Gubernatorial Race May Keep Both Men Off Ticket.

DEMOCRATS ON QUI VIVE

Detroit, Sept. 14 (A.P.)—Out of a combination of circumstances there appeared today the possibility—if not probability—that all the strenuous work of Alex J. Groesbeck and Wilbur M. Brucker in the primary election campaign for the Republican nomination for governor may go for naught.

Should Groesbeck persist in his determination to demand a recount of the votes cast last Tuesday it appears more than likely that certification of the nominee will be delayed so long as to make it impossible to get the successful candidate's name on the ballot November 4.

On the face of revised and corrected unofficial and official returns Brucker won the nomination by 5,555 votes. The poll tonight stood: Brucker, 369,927; Groesbeck, 364,372. Every indication today was that the Groesbeck forces had not altered their determination to petition for such a recount of the approximately 800,000 votes cast.

Many Errors Charged.

Burt D. Cady, State chairman of the Groesbeck-for-governor committee, said:

"We propose to file our petition and ask for a recount of the ballots, as the law provides. Already sufficient errors, mistakes and irregularities have been reported to bring the vote down to a narrow margin. We have other information that convinces us we are right and that our candidate actually received a plurality of the votes cast."

Aside from expressions of confidence in what the final official tabulation of the ballots will show, no statements were made today in the Brucker camp.

Friday Is Petition Deadline.

The State board of canvassers will meet in Lansing on Monday. It is probable, however, that official tabulations from all the county election boards will not then be in hand, and the State board may have to postpone its formal meeting. Mr. Groesbeck has until next Friday, ten days after the primary, in which to present his formal petition for a recount.

Either or both candidates would, of course, be able to run on stickers in November should the recount delay certification too long. Mr. Cady today emphatically denied the former Gov. Groesbeck had any intention of becoming a sticker candidate.

Democratic quarters, normally displaying only passive interest in Michigan political affairs, were keenly aroused today by the possibilities of the situation created by the aftermath of the bitterest primary campaign in recent State history.

Girl Who Said She'dWed For Cash and Didn'tHeld

New York, Sept. 14 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Ruth Miller, the blonde Queens miss who offered to marry any man who would contribute $1,000 for the support of her old mother and then didn't, though two suitors complained to police they had contributed, has been arrested in Bedford, Mass., according to word received today by police.

A warrant was sworn out charging Ruth with grand larceny. Suzuki Sukeji, Japanese chauffeur, who said he parted with $750 but heard no wedding bells, was the complainant.

Crater's Trail Admitted Lost; Missing 38 Days

New York, Sept. 14 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—The trail of the now 38-day missing Supreme Court Justice Joseph Force Crater has been completely lost, police were forced reluctantly to admit today.

No clew of the hundreds explored by the picked force of city detectives has given any indication of throwing the slightest light on the disappearance of a robust individual, apparently in the best of health, who when last seen informed friends he was going to his country home, Belgrade Lakes, Me., to rejoin his wife. This was the night of August 6.

identical with the first. But instead of a pseudo hijacker, it was occupied by a girl. The reporter had seen many like her back in his old days as a cub covering the night court. Perhaps some readers may recognize the type from that description.

She was not bad looking, and wore a tight-fitting, filmy gown. She smiled a smile that was obviously intended to be sweet and disarming. It was the same sort of smile that a night club hostess smiles when she opens the door to admit the man who flashed a roll of bills in the club the previous evening.

"Can I help you?" she inquired, solicitously.

"Probably," the reporter replied. "I need $100."

"Are you earning a salary?" she asked.

The reporter had learned his lesson.

"Yes," he replied. "I work for a lawyer over on Fifteenth street."

Sign Note for $140.

"To get a loan of $100," the high priestess of Shylock explained, "you sign a note for $140. Then you pay it back at the rate of $7 a week for 20 weeks."

"Is that all there is to it?" the reporter murmured. "My, I had no idea it was so simple."

"Well," she replied, "first you must fill out one of our application blanks, and then you must have two indorsers for your note. They both must be salaried people. And then it will take a few days to investigate, of course."

"But," inquired the reporter, "isn't $40 rather high interest to charge for a loan of $100 for only 20 weeks?"

"Oh, but you see," she explained with another of those sweet smiles that made the reporter involuntarily clutch at his watch, "that isn't really interest; it pays us for investigating you and your reference and indorsers, and it includes our commission and brokerage fees and all those expenses."

"Well, I'll have to think it over," the reporter replied, stalling for a getaway. "May I have one of your application banks so I can take it home and talk it over with my wife?"

Holds Onto Blanks.

The loan lady registered horror in every line of her carefully lifted face. "Oh, no" she exclaimed. "We never let our application blanks go out of the office. I'm very sorry, but I'm afraid we can't do business that way."

"You said something, girlie," murmured the reporter, but he didn't mean what she thought he did.

In the next place, identical in furnishings and equipment, and with the exception that the hostess was a brunette where the first had been a blonde, the reporter let the proceedings go a little further. He reached the stage of filling out an application. If the loan shark succeeded in tracing down the name he gave, he deserves better than $40 per $100.

There was nothing particularly unusual about the application, beyond the fact that it indulged rather freely in personalities and penetrated rather deeply into the applicant's past life.

There were, of course, spaces for filling in the applicant's name, address and telephone number; his occupation and the name of his employer; his salary and length of employment; the name of his landlord; the names and addresses of all his past employers, what he did for them and how much he received from them; the names of his wife and parents; how much he owes, and to whom; the names of all merchants with whom he deals, and the extent of his trade with them each week; the names of the two indorsers for his note; and the names of others who will vouch for his character.

The application did not seek to determine the name of his wife's pet kitten, his attitude on the question of world peace, the name of his bootlegger, nor even what he planned to do with the money when and if the money lender let him have it.

Other Places Visited.

Having completed that ordeal, the reporter departed to visit other places on his list. In each case he encountered similar conditions. Invariably the offices of the loan shark were meager and cheaply furnished, and in each case the procedure was the same; even the application forms were practically identical.

In each case the reporter was told that if, after due investigation, he was found worthy, he could borrow $100 by signing a note for $140, payable in 20 weeks at the rate of $7 a week, although in one or two instances when he demurred that $7 payments might be rather pressing, he was told that he might be granted a little longer period, in one case even as long as 28 weeks, at the rate of $5 a week.

In tomorrow's issue of The Post there will be further revelations of what happens when a person borrows money from a loan shark in Washington.

Working Together

For high quality and low prices

Between its customers and A&P there is a partnership which works to the advantage of both sides. The customers represent demand on the largest scale. A&P represents supply on an equally large scale.

Customers know they can get at A&P stores whatever they want, the best at lowest prices. A&P, knowing its customers' wants from their daily orders, is never in doubt. It stocks no goods that stay on it shelves unsold. Thereby it avoids losses that would have to be made good in prices.

And because A&P is thus the definitely instructed buying agent of millions of people, it is able to use their united buying power wherever their best interest dictates.

Each customer gets the benefit of every saving, of every wise selection of goods. A&P, relying on many small profits,* gains from increasing numbers of customers. They are attracted by the best service at the lowest cost. If there is a surer way of keeping the cost of food down and the quality of food up, no one has told about it.

GANGSTER'S SLAYING IS BLAMED ON GIRL

Jack Costa, of Moran Ranks, Shot Down Near Busy Chicago Street.

KILLERS KEEP LONG VIGIL

Chicago, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—Gangland guerrillas sniped another member of the rapidly thinning Moran gang early today—choosing a busy night life section of Sheridan road for their work—and, in police belief, used the victim's sweetheart to lure him to his death.

Jack Costa, whose string of cabarets offered an outlet for floods of Moran beer and liquor, was the target for the latest underworld vengeance. He was shot down as he walked across the courtyard of an apartment building, next door to a large motion picture theater at the buzzing intersection of Sheridan and Irving Park boulevards.

Confronted with a mass of circumstantial evidence, the girl, Margaret Reardon, 23, repeated time and again, to Capt. Hugh McCarthy: "I didn't. I knew he was going to be killed but I didn't have anything to do with it."

Authorities said the girl had told them she had rented an apartment across the court from that occupied by her and Costa so that Costa and a man she knew only as "Fred" would have a place to stay while she and her sister gave a party. She did not want Costa at the affair, she told officers. The apartment occupied by the assassins was directly above that rented by Miss Reardon for Costa and "Fred."

When the party was over, police said they learned, Miss Reardon called Costa and his companion. As Costa appeared in the courtyard he fell in a stream of fire from above. The girl was 10 feet in front of the victim, they said, and "Fred" as far behind, both out of range.

Detectives reported finding numerous cigarette stubs in the assassin's rendezvous, indicating the slayers had lain in wait for hours, and that some of the stubs bore lip rouge stains, indicating at least one woman had participated in the grim vigil. The lip sticks of Miss Reardon and her sister were taken for comparison.

Police attempted to link the slaying with the murder last May of Frank Piescia, in which Costa and "Ashcan Pete" Inserra were suspected.

ONE KILLED, 24 HURT IN POLISH OUTBREAK

Warsaw Clash Occurs After Meeting of Supporters of Pilsudski's Foes.

BEGUN BY REDS, REPORT

Warsaw Sept. 14 (A.P.).—One civilian was killed and four policemen and some 20 civilians were wounded, in a fight today following a meeting held by supporters of a parliamentary bloc which opposes Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, the prime minister. At least 100 persons were arrested, many of them armed.

One version of the affair is that a group of Communists joined the orderly political group as it left the hall and fired on police guarding the vicinity, but a government communique does not mention Communists.

It says that the political group left the hall with the members singing revolutionary songs and shouting "Down with Pilsudski!"

Since women were in the front the police attempted to disperse the gathering from the rear, the government statement says, whereupon some one threw a grenade which wounded several persons, including an officer of the police. The latter then drew revolvers and fired.

The meeting originally was scheduled to be held outdoors, but this was forbidden by government order.

Warsaw Socialists said tonight that clashes occurred between police and oppositionists today at Radom, Katowice, Szenstochowa, Poznan and Torun. They added that some persons were injured in Radom and in Katowice.

Four Youths Held In Theft of Gas

Police Say Quartet Was Siphoning Fluid From Parked Car.

Four young white men were arrested yesterday morning by policemen of the Third Precinct, who claim they caught the youths in the act of siphoning gasoline from a parked car. The four are charged with investigation for the time, however, until officials have an opportunity to check up on their records.

The men are John M. Grimes, 19 years old, of H street near Eleventh street southeast; Albert A. Mullenax, 21 years old, of Sixteenth street near C street southeast; George W. Lyons, 21 years old, of Fifteenth street near B street northeast, and Richard Gately, 20 years old, of I street near Twenty-second street northwest.

They were caught by Privates R. B. Rector and H. C. Johnson, who responded to a call at New Hampshire avenue and Eighteenth street.

Grocery Store Robbery Laid to Man Arrested

A few minutes after a chain store at First and U streets had been entered, Private W. C. Lewis, of the Traffic Bureau, arrested the alleged culprit. He gave his name as Jessie Carter, 35 years old, colored, of Twenty-fourth street near E street northwest.

Lewis saw the man near the store with packages under his arm. The man started to run upon sighting the policeman, but was captured after a short chase. The package proved to contain 5 pounds of coffee and about 60 packages of cigarettes. The store had been entered by breaking open a transom.

Wind Foils Balloon's Start On 10-Mile Altitude Effort

Prof. Piccard and Assistant to Try Again Later, Following Unsuccessful Attempt in Germany Traced to Strong Air Current and Hydrogen Shortage.

Augsburg, Germany, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—The plan of Prof. August Piccard to ascend 10 miles into the stratosphere suffered a setback today when his balloon failed to rise from the ground.

The amount of gas proved insufficient to raise the heavy gondola. He had provided 2,200 cubic meters of hydrogen, which filled only one-seventh of the balloon's capacity, expecting that as the high altitudes would be reached the gas would expand to 14,000 cubic meters. A strong wind, which arose immediately after the bag was filled, pressed it to the ground and prevented it from ascending.

Prof. Piccard, a member of the faculty of the University of Brussels, hoped to reach the highest altitude ever gained by man and study cosmic rays which, he believes, will furnish clews to great sources of energy. The gondola is of aluminum and equipped with all sorts of scientific instruments.

Piccard and his companion, Charles Kipfer, had hardly entered the gondola when the downward wind arose. When all attempts to get the balloon off the ground failed, Piccard opened the gondola's porthole, pulled a line which permitted the gas to escape and emerging with Kipfer said the attempt would be repeated at a later date.

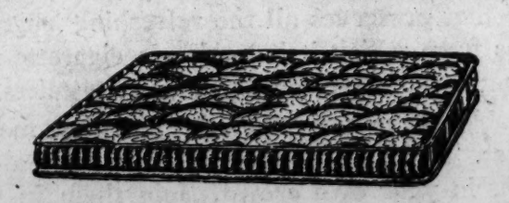

News of the impending flight brought thousands of early risers to the Rieding Balloon Works. The crowd seemed greatly disappointed when the balloon failed to rise.

The Rosenwald fund had added 762 schools for Negroes in North Carolina.

A feature of the Chicago police field day was a hold-up. The robbers were caught.

DAUGHTER ARRESTED IN SENATOR'S DEATH

Another Girl Also Held for Questioning in Killing of Illinois Legislator.

WIDOW CALLS ACT PLOT

Chicago, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—Inquiry into State Senator John T. Joyce's recent mysterious death took a sensational turn today as police held the former legislator's attractive 20-year-old foster daughter, Miss Isabelle Daly, for questioning.

The police also took into custody Miss Bernice Webb, who lived in a room at the Joyce home at the time of the senator's death. She, too, was questioned in private and no word of the outcome came from police or prosecutors.

Seizure of Miss Daly came after the investigation of Joyce's death supposedly had been dropped. State Attorney John A. Swanson had announced he would make no further inquiry after a coroner's jury held that death, which occurred August 10, was due to poisoning. The young woman was held incommunicado at an undisclosed police station and questioned throughout the night.

Action Called Plot.

Mrs. Joyce, the widow, termed the interrogation of Miss Daly a plot by her political enemies to hinder her campaign to succeed her husband in the State Senate. She was quoted by the Herald and Examiner as accusing the State's attorney's office of trying to show she had poisoned her husband because of jealousy of Miss Daly.

"I'm not afraid of anything Isabelle may tell them," the Herald and Examiner quoted Mrs. Joyce as saying. "They are trying to make out that I poisoned John Joyce because he had been too friendly with Isabelle. That's not true. If John Joyce was anything more than a kind foster father to the girl, I had no knowledge of it."

Quarreled Last Fall.

Mrs. Joyce said she and Miss Daly had quarreled last fall but that the dispute had nothing to do with Joyce and that they continued to correspond as friends, according to the paper.

Mrs. Joyce previously had expressed dissatisfaction with State's Attorney Swanson's announcement that he would drop the case. She had employed a former coroner's toxicologist to conduct a private inquiry for her.

Before his death, Joyce had charged that terrorism had been employed by his political opponents in his ward during the last primary. He was to have appeared before the grand jury in connection with these charges and a theory of his death was that political foes had caused it. Mrs. Joyce holds to this theory.

1,557 Use Air Line In First Ten Days

New York, Philadelphia, Washington Airway Views Number as Record.

Fifteen hundred and fifty-seven paid passengers, said to be a world record for any air line, were carried in the first ten days of operation on the New York, Philadelphia & Washington Airway, whose hourly service started September 1, according to an announcement by the company officials yesterday.

Almost 39,000 miles have been flown in the ten days of scheduled operation, and during that time the trimotored planes in use have been carrying 60 per cent capacity loads.

In 95 out of each 100 flights the planes have carried out their scheduled flights on time, making 191 complete flights from Washington to New York during the ten days in operation.

command of Inspector Thaddeus R. Bean, who will report directly to Maj Pratt.

This new central squad, which constitutes an augmented consolidation of the former individual units, goes into action this morning, with headquarters in Police Headquarters Building at 462 Louisiana avenue. It is understood the purpose of the merger was to prevent possible upsets which have resulted in the past when various units have worked at cross purposes because each was unfamiliar with the activities of the others. Closer cooperation with the office of United States Attorney Leo A. Rover also is expected to result.

GAYETY

Joan Lee is the "September" treat handed to burlesque fans here yearly. This is her third successive season here at the Gayety with Max Fields, Hebrew comic, in "Kudling Kuties." Fields, who now produces his own unit, supplies the necessary humor that makes "Kudling Kuties" a show above the average. Little Ann Fink, who has been before burlesque fans for some time, again leads her soldier march and garners in applause.

The Washington own chorus, in stunning costumes, support the principals in a manner worthy of praise. An animal vaudeville act and some song numbers rendered by that "blues singer," Petra Vocala, is well received. Mat Mannix and his Gayety Trubadors delight with their music. "Step On It" is scheduled to make its debut here next week.

Man Hit by Brick Treated.

John Henry Harris, colored, 50 years old, of Snow's court northwest, received treatment yesterday at Emergency Hospital for lacerations of the scalp received when he was struck by a brick thrown by an unknown man. After treatment, Harris was booked at the Third Precinct Station for being drunk and disorderly.

Panama, Linking Two Americas, Reflects Dual Civilization Knocking Her Portals

Country Leans Toward Yankee Modes in Business Life.

The following is the second in a series of articles outlining present-day conditions among our national neighbors to the South.

By EVELYN TRENT.

Panama lies upon the narrow isthmus that joins North and South America, under a tropic sun whose blaze is tempered by cooling breezes from the two great oceans that wash her shores. Bisected by the canal, into which nearly $400,000,000 of American money have been poured, the small republic is a symbol of the two civilizations knocking at her gates; the Spanish-Indian culture of colonial days and that of Anglo-Saxon America which has revolutionized her existence within the last quarter century.

Here, according to her citizens, is the connecting link, culturally and economically speaking, between the two Americas. Since the days of Columbus, the accident of geography has made Panama the cross-roads of world commerce, and the same factor makes her the future highway over which the culture of two continents may some day meet and mingle.

There is much in common between Panama and Cuba. Both owe their freedom to North American influence and intervention, and both are strategically important to the United States. Just as Cuba holds the key to the Caribbean Sea, so does Panama command the approaches to the canal. Both countries are governed in relation to their powerful benefactor by special treaty regulations that guarantee full protection to American interests. That this fact limits their territorial and political sovereignty is vigorously denied by both.

Panama Great Pleasure City.

The Panama Canal has brought not only a stream of international commerce to the gates of the republic, but has colored her national life with Anglo-Saxon institutions and ideas. Speech, customs, manners, business and commerce, the very currency itself, are mixtures of the two Americas. In the capital, a new city is being superimposed upon the old, a city of clean streets, immaculate sanitation and rigorous police protection.

While losing none of its historic traditions and associations, Panama City now boasts broad boulevards, imposing public buildings and magnificent homes. All the pleasures of a metropolis of the tropics may be found there; miles of splendid highways and beaches, palatial clubs, a stadium, bull ring, and golf course, with a project under way for a $2,000,000 casino for the attraction of a steadily growing tourist trade.

For Panama ranks with Cuba as one of the pleasure spots of the Americas and is making a strong bid for the annual influx of visitors from abroad, 40,000 of whom are booked for the next carnival season. Then all the distractions of a gay metropolis will be at their height; dog racing, cock fighting, gambling, lotteries, yachting, horse races, bull fights and other sports.

Tourists and the canal have brought prosperity to Panama, regardless of the world economic crisis. But she has still another claim to distinction. Thanks to its hospitals and those of the Canal Zone, the republic is rapidly becoming recognized as the medical center of tropical America, to which people come from surrounding countries for treatment. Besides the Santo Tomas Hospital, there is the Gorgas Institute for the study of tropical diseases, to which students from America and Europe are flocking. A mild climate, coupled with expert medical care in modern institutions, have helped to win this latest fame for Panama.

American Money Keeps Trade Up.

These were among the subjects discussed with me by two of Panama's leading statesmen, President Don Florencio Harmodio Arosemena and the foreign minister, Dr. Don Jose Demostheno Arosemena, both belonging to different branches of the same powerful family that is influential in the affairs of the republic.

I was received in the presidential palace, which resembles a Moorish jewel casket in its exquisite proportions and delicacy of line and color. Police guard the entrance, which leads to a colonnaded patio opening on the sky, where gorgeous tropical plants combine with Spanish tile and mosaic to give life and color to the scene. Lazy tortoises swim at ease in the marble fountain, around which white herons and aigrettes and various gay-plumaged fowl preen their feathers.

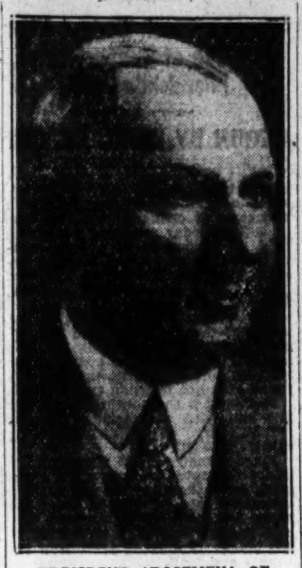

Panama's engineer president received me upstairs in the formal audience chamber, emerging brisk and smiling from his inner office, with the air of an American business executive counting out precious minutes of his time. He is young, as befits a young republic, being somewhere in his early forties, and combines an energetic personality with a progressive outlook.

"Panama is in a better situation today than the other Latin American countries that live by foreign trade," he said. "While not remaining entirely immune from the general economic crisis, we were among the last to feel its effects and be, I hope, the first to recover. This is largely due to the fact that we have an annual fixed income from the rental of the canal and from the interest on our money invested in the United States. Then, too, we feel the benefit of the American soldiers and canal employes, and there is also the tourist trade, which is growing steadily.

"There has been some decline in our customs revenues, due to the decrease in shipping and a falling off in tourist travel. We hope, however, that our situation will improve with that of the rest of the world, and with the completion of our new $2,000,000 casino, for which a concession has been granted, that additional inducements will be offered for tourists to come here.

President Against Another Canal.

"A program of public works is being pushed to completion, especially highway construction, including a section of the Pan-American Highway that will extend for 300 miles from Panama City to the borders of Costa Rica. Eighty per cent of this work is already completed, and over $2,000,000 have so far been spent on road development. The Pan-American PRESIDENT AROSEMENA OF PANAMA.

Highway Commission, recently here, has declared that we are far ahead of the Central American republics in this respect."

Asked whether Panama felt closer to the United States than to Latin America, President Arosemena replied:

"There is no doubt that Panama looks to the United States for inspiration, and that we are also influenced by Europe and Latin America. Our peculiar position brings us closer in every respect to the United States than to any other people. I believe that President Hoover has done much to bring the American nations together, first by his visit to our countries, then by his selection of officials of the highest stamp to send to Latin American posts. That alone was a great step toward winning the sympathies of the various republics and has done much to improve the good feeling toward the United States."

Questioned in regard to the possible effect upon Panama if the Nicaraguan Canal should be built, President Arosemena replied that he saw no need for another canal for many years to come.

Leaving Panama's chief executive, I sought out the imposing government building in which the foreign office of Dr. Jose Demostheno Arosemena, the foreign minister, who, like the president, speaks English, and who has a frank and engaging personality. Older in appearance and more of the diplomat in his manner, he yet talked freely of Panamanian problems and hopes for the future.

"Does Panama belong to Central or to South America?" I asked him, "and does she look to Latin America or to the United States in her scheme of national development?"

Latin America Turns From Europe.

"Panama considers herself as belonging more to South than to Central America," he said without hesitation. "For 75 years we were a part of Colombia, and before that we belonged to the Bolivarean Federation, consisting of Bolivia, Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru and Panama. Historically, we have never considered ourselves as belonging to Central America.

"As for our relations with other states, we are the meeting point of the Americas. Our culture today is more American than Spanish, but we share the same traditions, language and blood as the other South American republics. Thus we form a link between the two continents.

"I believe that a spirit of Pan-Americanism is growing in every Latin American country, all of which are beginning to understand the United States better than in the past, and this is promoting a new Pan-American sentiment. Europe is a different world, whose people have a different psychology, different viewpoints and interests than our own. Here in America we all belong to the New World and our interests are shared in common. The problems of Europe are not our problems. We have here two cultures, two civilizations and practically but two languages, which in time will become universally used on both continents.

"It is only a question of time when Latin America and Anglo-Saxon America will become one, for we are all growing closer to one another and to the United States. Twenty-five years ago there was uneasiness as to the growth in strength and influence of the latter, but now we Latin Americans realize that this does not do us any harm and we are beginning to trust the United States.

"After all, we find there the best market for our products and we do not believe she has territorial ambitions. It is my conviction that not 1 per cent of the American population wishes to conquer more territory."

U. S. Commissary Cuts Into Profits.

"How is American intervention in Nicaragua regarded by the rest of Latin America," I asked him, "and what of the Nicaraguan Canal?"

"That is something for Nicaraguans to think about," he replied. "As for the canal, we in Panama do not think it will be a work of the present generation. If the canal is eventually built, it will be for generations yet to come. Even if it is built, it will not hurt Panama very much, but experts agree that there will be no necessity for both canals for another century."

"And what is the attitude of Latin America toward the Monroe Doctrine?" I inquired.

"The Monroe Doctrine? In my personal opinion, the Monroe Doctrine is like electricity. We enjoy its benefits, receive its effects, yet no one knows exactly what it is."

Turning from international questions to ones more directly affecting the welfare of the republic itself, I asked Dr. Arosemena what had been the benefit to Panama of the canal.

"The Panama Canal has had a great influence upon the economic and sanitary condition of the republic," he replied. "We believe that we might have gained more had the United States been a little more generous toward us, especially in its commissary activities, giving our merchants a chance to develop a real trade, and greatly increasing our prosperity. As it is, the Government commissaries at Colon and Balboa, which sell to canal employes at lower prices than our local merchants can afford due to lower freight rates and duty-free goods, creates an unfair competition within the country.

"The commissaries should sell only necessities, but they sell luxuries as well. For twenty years the Panama government and commercial interests have made representations to the United States Government about this question and negotiations are still going on, which we hope will eventually rectify the situation. Aside from that, relations between the two countries have never been more friendly than now."

HOOVER TO MEET TARIFF HEAD TODAY

Others of Commission May Be Announced After He Consults Fletcher.

CAMP HAS WARM SPELL

Orange, Va., Sept. 14 (A.P.).—With one of the major problems of his administration—appointment of a tariff commission—completed, President Hoover rested today in his mountain lodge.

It was reported before the Chief Executive left the White House yesterday that he had completed selection of the six men who will operate the flexible provisions of the tariff bill through which Mr. Hoover expects inequalities of the legislation to be corrected.

Tomorrow, soon after returning to Washington, he is to confer with the new chairman of the commission, Henry P. Fletcher, of Pennsylvania, and soon thereafter will announce the names of the other four men. In addition to Mr. Fletcher, Thomas Walker Page, of Virginia, already has been appointed.

Events of the War 13 Years Ago Today

SEPTEMBER 15, 1917.

A German submarine was reported off Nantucket, one ship having been fired upon.

Russian forces were beaten back after making some gains near Riga.

Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovich, brother of the Czar, was reported near collapse.

Strong forces were reported at work seeking to have the Kaiser and President Wilson make simultaneous peace moves.

A touch of late summer weather today broke the coolness of the mountains. It found Mr. Hoover and the little party which had accompanied him ready to remain in the shade. Hiking, in which Mr. Hoover engaged, and a little horseback riding, in which he did not take part, were the only activities of the camp.

Man Stricken by Heart Trouble.

The condition of Walter S. Dickson, 42 years old, of the Chastleton Apartments, was reported as still undetermined last night at Emergency Hospital. Dickson was stricken with heart trouble on the street near Twelfth and G streets northwest Saturday night. Bystanders who noticed the illness of the man called Emergency Hospital.

THERE'S a harmony between the natural loveliness of this modern age and the natural, mild goodness of Camels. And if you find them keeping company, don't be surprised.

Camel has given the world the luxury of a naturally mild cigarette—a cigarette that preserves all the refreshing fragrance of the choice, mild tobaccos from which it is made—a cigarette that is delightfully smooth, but never flat, never parched, never tasteless.

Modern smokers are awake to the fact that mere flatness doesn't mean mildness. That's one reason there's such a swing to Camels. Watch it right in your own crowd. Join them in Camels—a smoke that's enjoyable all the way—all the time.

FRENCH SEA FLIERS START TOUR TODAY

Coste and Bellonte Ready to Take Off for Trip Across 30 States.

LINDBERGH'S AID SEEN

New York, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—Bearing the friendship of France through the heart of America, Disudonne Coste and Maurice Bellonte will take off tomorrow on a 15,000-mile good-will tour in the scarlet sesquiplane Question Mark which carried them from Paris to New York.

The flight will last 25 days and will take the famous airmen, first ever to fly westward over the north Atlantic from mainland to mainland in a heavier-than-air machine, across 30 States in which they will make 31 stops and pass over about 70 other cities.

The first stop will be Hartford, Conn., and the next, Boston, where Monday night will be spent. Thence the course bends westward along a northerly route to the Pacific and back through Southern States. The last night, October 9, will be spent at Philadelphia, the fliers returning to New York the next day.

Conceived by Lindbergh.

The tour is sponsored by a committee of 20 prominent men, and is generally believed to have been conceived by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, who himself made a similar but more extended good-will flight after his return in 1927 from the first solo flight across the north Atlantic.

Coste and Bellonte were dinner guests of the Lindberghs the evening after their arrival and it is understood first plans for the tour were made on that occasion. The next day they left for Dallas, Tex., to win the $25,000 Eastwood prize, and for Washington, to be received by President Hoover. And in their absence the committee was formed. Government approval of the flight was obtained and the itinerary was decided.

For a time it seemed that there must be postponement of the tour, for on their return from Texas and Washington the French fliers discovered a split in one end of their wooden propeller, which is of a type not available in America. But factory repairs were made and received final approval when Coste's mechanic arrived by ship today and conducted severe tests.

Other Planes to Go.

Two other planes will accompany the transatlantic Question Mark. Preceding it on each leg of the long flight will be a Department of Commerce ship carrying Maj. George Witten, tour manager, and Rene Racouver, the Frenchmen's interpreter. Trailing it will be the Army plane of F. Trubee Davison, Assistant Secretary of War, carrying Coste's mechanic, who will check the engine at every stop.

The itinerary for the first week follows: Monday, New York to Hartford to Boston; Tuesday, Boston to Cleveland; Wednesday, Cleveland to Indianapolis to Detroit, circling over Akron, Columbus, Dayton, Richmond, Fort Wayne and Toledo; Thursday, Detroit to Chicago, circling over Lansing, Joliet and Elgin; Friday, Chicago to Milwaukee to the twin cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, where the week-end will be spent.

After that the course lies over Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho and Washington. Flying down across Oregon to San Francisco, the fliers turn eastward across Arizona, Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and so back to New York.

well be investigated also. It turned out not to be perfunctory at all, as you will see.

Ex-Convict in Background.

So Spates came to New York after the election. I asked him if Dr. Doran had talked to him about the cases and he said "not much." I gave him the three files and placed a room at his disposal.

In the Curatone matter he had the reports of my investigators that the desired increase from 200 to 900 gallons of whisky a month was not necessary, notably because there was no apparent market for the company's product, that "Guiatone" tonic was to be found only in several small drug stores.

The American Denaturing reports showed a former convict in the background, the campaign contributing Albert Gross, who had been fined in one liquor case and arrested in others. It was indicated that a legitimate profit could not be made in the company's business.

The Strictly Kosher case evidence indicated that Louis Schattner, who was the company, had been implicated in the scandalous sacramental wine situation of 1925, though he claimed false identification.

Proceedings Are Ex Parte.

Mr. Spates held three hearings, on November 13 and 14, in which the witnesses for the permittees were heard, practically without cross-examination. Their testimony consisted largely of denials and complaints about the tactics of the investigators, the most easily trumped up sort of charges. They were not confronted with the Government witnesses. Mr. Spates said he thought it would be "fairer" to have the proceedings ex parte.

In any event, in each case he wrote a report finding my actions entirely unjustified, and leaning toward a granting of the desired increases.

"I would suggest," wrote Spates, in the Curatone matter, "that further investigations be made of this matter by two disinterested, tactful and discreet agents having but one instruction and one thought in mind, to arrive at the facts upon which the proper administrative officials could act intelligently."

The crux of this whole matter was whether the requirements shown were bona fide. Now this case had been investigated first by two men whom Doran knew as the most reliable inspectors in my office. Another pair, equally reliable, had been assigned because Washington thought the first pair might be prejudiced. Now Spates wanted another investigation by a pair who would be "unprejudiced."

I told Doran it looked to me as though the only "unprejudiced" report would be one in favor of the committee.

Refuses Hand in Whitewash.

I went to Washington November 26 and talked the Spates reports over with Dr. Doran, Alf Oftedal, O. D. Jackson and some others, pointing out that apparently he did not consider all the evidence available.

I told them there was going to be no whitewash if I could help it and refused to recede from my position though Dr. Doran said he thought Curatone ought to have at least one more barrel of whisky.

Doran at this conference complained that he was being criticized by the men in the New York office. I said nothing but thought that if the man at the head does not stand behind his men he must expect to be criticized by them—and justly.

Meanwhile I gradually reduced the American Denaturing's alcohol withdrawals because they could not show me requirements warranting even what they had been getting. Finally Joseph Steinberg—the Curtis campaigner who represented the American and Curatone right through—took the case to court, and the decision fairly revolutionized permit law. The court decided that I as administrator had discretionary powers in the matter of withdrawal permits, irrespective of basic permit. In the course of this Steinberg tried to have me cited for contempt, but that was not hard to beat. On December 31 I refused to renew the American's permit.

And not long later I found that Curatone was using grain alcohol in its tonic instead of whisky and revoked its permit.

Koenig Takes No Blame.

With these companies Steinberg and his political partner, Matthew Quay Glaser, went out of my life. Some time later Samuel S. Koenig told me he had met them and they were both very sore at him, charging that he had been responsible for my appointment.

"I told them I had nothing to do with it," said Koenig. "In fact, I told them I was not even consulted."

"I don't see how you get along with him," Steinberg remarked.

"I don't have any trouble with Campbell," Koenig said he told them. "But, then, of course I never go to see him about an increase in an alcohol permit."

Recognizes Familiar Figure.

But I still had the Strictly Kosher case to plague me. In the records before my day it appears that Louis Schattner and Rabbi Twersky had a permit to manufacture wines, as the Strictly Kosher Wine Co. at 425 Grand street, Manhattan, Twersky's connection being merely to certify that the wine was kosher in accordance with orthodox Jewish law. In consequence of the wine stores scandal of 1925 their permit was revoked for cause. They wanted a new permit, and began my trouble.

What power is behind Schattner I do not know. Former Representative Frank W. Mondell and John A. Bolles, a district political leader, represented him at times as attorney.

Commissioner Doran wrote me August 11, 1928, that Schattner would call on me to apply for a special permit to allow him to sell 9,000 gallons of wine he still had on hand, into legitimate channels. It is quite customary to issue such permits when a permit has been revoked.

Prior to this I had investigated Schattner—since he was asking to have his permit reinstated—and become convinced that he was the same man who had been involved in violations in three sacramental wine stores. He tried to put the onus on his nephew, but witnesses positively identified him.

Sees Pressure on Doran.

However, I issued the permit to sell the 9,000 gallons, in accordance with instructions from Dr. Doran. This permit expired October 18, 1928, and during its life he made no effort to dispose of the wine, but promptly applied for an extension of the special permit.

I telephoned Doran and tried to tell him the evidence I had against Schattner, but he did not listen very kindly, and on October 19 he wrote me very caustically that "the discussion and report, with respect to this Mr. Schattner had gone far afield," so I sent him the reports, and on October 25 he wrote:

"There is additional material disclosed with respect to the numerous violations at these sacramental wine stores of which I was not originally aware. I believe that your disapproval is justified and have so informed Mr. Mondell."

Forced to Issue Permit.

But evidently in these heated days of the presidential campaign some pressure was being exerted on Dr. Doran, for within a fortnight Mr. Spates had been sent to New York for his hearing, with the results I have told. With regard to the Spates report I wrote to Doran:

"His recommendations to you appear to be predicated solely upon certain testimony taken by him on his visit to New York, with utter and absolute disregard of what had resulted in previous hearings and investigations in this office.

"Spates evidently believes that the evidence given by * * *, a convicted bootlegger, should be given more weight in this matter than the testimony of Jacob M. Keller, who leased the premises at 337 East Thirty-fourth street to Schattner. I find no comment in Spates' finding, to the overwhelming testimony in the record concerning Schattner's connection with the premises at 402 West Forty-ninth street and 155 East 110th street."

However, I was again instructed to issue a special permit to Schattner for disposal of the wine on hand. About this time Schattner discovered his wine was going sour and he applied for withdrawal of about 7,000 gallons more in order to blend it with the old wine and make it fit for sale. This also was allowed. Naturally, my inspectors watched the 16,000 gallons carefully to see that it was blended.

On December 29, 1928, Dr. Doran telephoned me that Representative Mondell had complained to him that Schattner was being persecuted by unnecessary inspection. The commissioner was very caustic and said he objected to my office immediately pouncing on permittees who made appeal to Washington, that the attitude of my office was that if a man appealed to Washington he was to be hunted down. This, he said, would have to stop, and there was plenty of other work to do without jumping on Schattner.

Of course, this was nonsensical. I never made any effort to persecute those who appealed to Washington; but because they went to Washington was no reason to give them special consideration. Such a policy would mean, if adopted, that the permittee who complained to Washington would immediately secure immunity.

Wine Delivery Halted.

Nothing further happened until March 2, 1929, when I went to Washington and told the commissioner that I thought this matter should be settled, and that Schattner was not to be trusted. He said he agreed with me. We agreed that I should issue one more 90-day permit for disposal of the wine, and if he were not rid of it at the end of that time we should ask for its forfeiture. The commissioner agreed definitely to this.

During April Schattner made a feeble attempt to dispose of some of the wine, and on Friday, April 19, the agents I had watching his premises saw 50 gallons loaded into a taxicab. They followed to an address in Beaver street, the premises of one Rabbi Tindler. They arrested the people concerned because they had no papers for transportation.

Doran evidently heard about it right away, for he called me up to ask about it.

Schattner's defense was that the taxicab driver had taken the wine to the wrong address, and produced permit papers authorizing delivery of the 50 gallons to an address in the same vicinity.

However, the shipment had lacked sufficient revenue stamps and because of this Schattner was later indicted; in court the case was dismissed, because of the trivial amount involved.

Evidently thinking this had wiped out all of his past indiscretions, Schattner made an application for a permit to manufacture wine. He came to see me August 7, angrily threw his keys on my desk, told me to take the wine, he was tired of paying rent. I returned the keys.

On October 31 the commissioner telephoned me from Washington ordering me to issue Schattner a permit. I thought he meant another permit to dispose of the wine, but he said further to allow Schattner to make wine, inasmuch as the wine he now had was not fit for sale. I could not quite understand this, because under a temporary permit there could be no manufacture.

That same afternoon Schattner arrived and handed me an application for a permit to make wine, which he said Doran had seen and approved. I told him I had talked to Doran and would give him a temporary permit. Very self-assured and loud-spoken, he said he would refuse to accept it, and angrily told me the commissioner would write me a letter in the morning.

However, no letter came. At 10 o'clock the following morning I telephoned Doran and told him what had occurred. I asked him if he had seen the application. He made no reply to that, but he wanted to know what right I had to refuse Schattner any permit, inasmuch as the judge had cleared him of the charge of evading the revenue. Doran said there was nothing in the records to warrant my refusing Schattner any kind of permit. He said I had spent more time on Schattner and one other permittee than on all the bootleggers in New York. He practically dared me to refuse to issue the permit, saying:

Takes Doran's Dare.

"All right, you go ahead and refuse it, and I'll show you what will happen afterward."

This threat came after I had said I did not want to haggle, and if he insisted I would issue the permit. It was rather evident that he did not want to put himself on record as instructing me to issue the permit.

It would have been much easier for the officials at Washington if I had been willing to take responsibility on the record for the things they wanted done.

I took the commissioner's dare, and refused to issue Schattner a permit of any nature, and that was the last I heard about it from the commissioner.

Last March Schattner sued me in the Federal court to compel me to issue the permit. The court sustained me. The Strictly Kosher Wine Co. is out of business.

COST OF ENFORCEMENT.

Prohibition Commissioner Woodcock's request for an increase of $2,000,000 in the appropriation for enforcement activities is reasonable and should be approved. With the additional appropriation he would increase the field force by 500 men and improve the efficiency of the recently established enforcement college. At present the dry enforcement agencies are working on a $15,000,000 appropriation, of which $9,000,000 is allotted to the Prohibition Bureau. The Coast Guard will require an appropriation equal to this year's allotment, and there is little possibility of reducing the appropriation for the industrial alcohol bureau. Hence, if the requested increase is granted the total allowance for enforcement will have to be increased. Congress may be depended upon to make a fuss over any attempt to increase the allowance for enforcement, but prohibition is on trial, and no reasonable requests having as their purpose the improvement of the enforcement machine should be refused.

Two million dollars and 500 men will have to be spread thin to be distributed through the extensive machine which the Prohibition Bureau must maintain. Fortunately, however, the new regime is relieved of certain activities for which considerable sums have been expended and to which a large force has been detailed. Upon his return from a mid-Western inspection tour last week, Director Woodcock reported that the prohibition situation in Detroit was better than it had ever been, largely because of the working of the newly enacted Canadian liquor export regulations. Canada has undertaken to prevent the export of liquor to the United States, with the result that American prohibition authorities can diminish the force that has been maintained on the Canadian border, distributing it throughout the country or concentrating it where needed.

Five hundred additional agents added to those who may now be withdrawn from the Canadian border should enable the newly reorganized Prohibition Bureau to demonstrate whether or not it will be more successful than its predecessors in bringing about a truly dry era. If the bureau is not granted the additional facilities it deems necessary it will have a convincing excuse for its failure to enforce prohibition. The blame will then fall upon Congress.

POPULATION OF ATLANTA.

Seldom has civic pride been more dramatically exemplified than by the suit filed by residents of Atlanta to compel the Director of the Census to list its population at 360,692 instead of 270,367. The petition recites that the Census Bureau refuses to include in the enumeration of Atlanta the population of certain boroughs that were recently annexed and incorporated into the City of Atlanta. Their total population comes to 90,325. Atlanta, says the complaint, will be irreparably damaged if it is officially declared to be a city of 270,367 instead of 360,692 population.

Atlanta's sad story calls attention to the plight of other municipalities that are prevented by circumstances from claiming the population that is supported by their industries or that attaches itself to their outskirts. In Montgomery, Prince George and Arlington counties, for example, dwell thousands who are Washingtonians in every sense of the word, but who can not be counted as Washingtonians because they reside in communities that are not part of the District. Across the river from Philadelphia lies Camden, a municipality of almost 150,000, the population of which could never be claimed by the City of Brotherly Love because it dwells in New Jersey. Cincinnati has half a dozen municipal satellites in the Kentucky towns that are situated immediately across the Ohio. The two Kansas Citys constitute a sizable community, but from the population standpoint they must remain divided. There are any number of twin communities separated by State lines that are urban units, but the Census Bureau is forced to regard them as separate cities.

The Atlanta case is somewhat different. There no State line separates the disputed boroughs from the parent municipality. Possibly the courts will direct the Census Bureau to accord Atlanta the 360,692 population to which she claims she is entitled. The other population units, however, are not so fortunate. They have to content themselves with setting up "metropolitan areas" for the purpose of impressing the world with their size and, hence, their importance.

APPROACHES TO WASHINGTON.

After ten years of delay New York avenue is to be extended from Florida avenue to Bladensburg road. A total of $40,000 is available for the grading, and District officials hope to secure an appropriation in the 1931 budget for surfacing this new approach to Washington. Inasmuch as the District has owned nearly all of the property to be used in this extension for ten years, it is difficult to understand why the improvement has been delayed.

When completed New York avenue will be an excellent boulevard leading into the heart of the city from Baltimore and other Eastern cities. The center strip in Bladensburg road is to be paved from New York avenue to the District-Maryland line, and the Baltimore boulevard is also being widened.

Most American cities have inadequate approach highways. Most of the thoroughfares leading to and from the larger cities were constructed before the days of motor traffic. It is absurd to try to cure congestion when busy highways converge and pour their rapidly moving traffic into narrow streets that meander through great cities. Washington is fortunate, indeed, to be able to add another broad approach without spending millions to buy up valuable property.

An important new approach was recently opened by the extension of Rhode Island avenue. Traffic that has concentrated on this new street will be relieved by the improvement now contemplated. Extension of other boulevards leading to the National Capital will become necessary, however, as motor traffic increases. Washington is a pivotal center for a large area, and a favorite spot for millions of tourists. It is time to look to the future and to formulate plans that will save Washington from the distress that has befallen dozens of American cities as a result of clogged arteries of travel. The survey of traffic in this metropolitan area, which is contemplated by the Washington regional highway committee, should be of much value in determining the location of approach boulevards for future needs.

WOMEN WORKERS.

Figures released by the director of the census indicate that more than 10,000,000 women are engaged in gainful occupations. The tendency for women to seek employment outside of their homes is steadily growing stronger.

The Census Bureau has made a special study of women in industry, covering a 50-year period. It finds that more than 20 per cent of all persons engaged in gainful occupations are women, and that 24 per cent of all women may be classed with the working population. Nearly 50 per cent of all unmarried women are earning money, and one married woman out of every eleven is a wage earner. "Whatever opinions may be held as to the proper sphere of women," the bureau concludes, "the fact is that, to a considerable extent, woman's place today is no longer in the home."

Studies of this kind are particularly interesting because they are the source of the assertion that America has attained prosperity only by putting its entire population to work. Women are being taken out of the home, the critics say, and are forced into factories and offices. It is taken for granted that employment of women means a breaking up of home life, despite the fact that less than one-fourth of all women workers are married. It is true that 37 per cent of the married women employed do not lead a normal home life, but there is nothing to indicate that their home life is disrupted.

There is no justification for the assumption that a greater share of the world's work is being imposed upon the weaker sex. An increase in the employment of women does not mean an increase in their burdens. It does mean that work has been transferred from the home to the factory where it can be done more economically. Women who once slaved at home or in sweat shops without being classed as workers now put in shorter hours at factories or offices, and become an integral part of that class known as the gainfully employed. A considerable share of the world's work has always been done by women. It is only because the division of labor between the sexes is less sharply defined under modern economic conditions that women are thought to bear a greater share of the burden.

Less than 40 per cent of the population of the United States is engaged in either production or service. Calling attention to this fact in a recent address, Dr. William M. Steuart, director of the census, said: "We may well wonder how the money spent so lavishly in America is earned." Compared with other countries and with past ages the percentage of the population engaged in labor is small. Furthermore, hours are much shorter and the comforts of living have multiplied many fold.

REGULATING OIL PRODUCTION.

The Government decided more than a year ago that it could do little to curb overproduction of petroleum which had engulfed the oil industry in difficulties. A decision from the Attorney General put a halt to the American Petroleum Institute's program of voluntary curtailment, and the problem was handed over to the States. Legislatures in the principal oil-producing States have acted, and now it appears that the problem may be handed back to the Federal authorities—this time to the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court of Oklahoma has upheld the oil and gas conservation law of that State by quashing a writ that would have restrained the corporations commission from enforcing its proration orders in the south Oklahoma City field. This field is under drastic limitations. When a new well comes in it is allowed to run for 24 hours, then it must be closed for 65 days, after which it is allowed to run at 16 per cent of capacity. The large producers favor this limitation as the only possible means of avoiding overproduction and enormous overhead expenses. All owners and lease holders in fields under such regulations share the output on a pro rata basis. Oil is drawn out of the ground only as fast as the market warrants, and the usual scramble to sink a dozen wells where only one is needed is thus avoided.

An independent producer attacked the validity of the statute under which these regulations are carried out. It is contended that the Legislature had no authority to authorize such limitation, and that proration amounts to depriving a man of his property without due process of law, which is forbidden in the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. It seems inevitable that the controversy will be carried to the Supreme Court.

A decision is of special importance because of the influence it may have on litigation in other States that have enacted similar laws to conserve their oil. Should these proration statutes be upset by a Supreme Court decision the most important achievement of the oil conservation forces in recent months would be undone. The Government has found itself incapable of handling this perplexing problem. It remains to be seen whether the States have sufficient control over private production to solve it.

Senator Caraway offers an ingenious explanation as to why he happens to be an "ex" Arkansas farmer, but maybe the real reason is that he has spent most of his time in recent years in Washington.

Too bad the hurricane did not hit Florida, so that it could be charged up against Hoover.

WOES OF A PRINCE

From the Boston Transcript.

We are not surprised to learn that the Prince of Wales, weary of the interminable round of laying corner stones and unveiling monuments, now stands up in his boots and declares definitely that he will make no public engagements for the next seven weeks. If any hospital beds must be opened let the patients open them themselves and hop in. If somebody must listen to the honeyed words of provincial lord mayor No. 768, let his wife do it. As for himself, he proposes to loaf and invite his soul until next autumn when, as Bagman Extraordinary to the British Empire, he packs up his kit and starts on his mission of good will to the countries of South America.

We don't know who first coined the phrase "noblesse oblige," but it is safe to say that he never meant it to mean that a prince's rank laid upon him the duty of engaging in those occupations which nowadays seem to be expected of an heir apparent. We can well imagine with what disdain Edward the Black Prince, with what Homeric laughter Prince Hal, crony of Falstaff, would accompany their royal descendant during his itinerary of an ordinary day. How they would shake their heads at the degeneracy of the times. In their age the chief business of a prince was to be, like Kipling's Fuzzy-Wuzzy, a first-class fighting man. If war broke out he put on his shining armor and with mace and battle-ax went forth to defend his cause; prepared to die if need be in the midst of his knights and squires. No parliamentary enactments hampered him in the exercise of his authority nor kept him safe at home while his subjects went out to fight for him.

How can we account, then, for the change that has taken place in royal occupations, that offers us the curious paradox of a prince stripped of all political power being more carefully guarded in his person than any feudal prince ever was? If we may believe Cervantes, it was the introduction of firearms into warfare. A prince was willing enough to be cleft to the chin in fair hand-to-hand combat with his equals, but he was made uneasy by the thought that he might be killed by a chance shot from the musket of a base-born varlet skulking behind a distant hedge. And so, little by little, gunpowder put an end to chivalry. Individual skill and strength and bravery availed nothing against the new weapons, and the last prince to risk his life side by side with his men-at-arms was Charles II, who gallantly led a cavalry charge at the battle of Worcester in 1651. Just two hundred years later, Albert, prince consort of Queen Victoria, opened the Crystal Palace exhibition of 1851, and then and there established a custom that has grown to be recognized as one of the obligations resting upon the heir apparent The hand that would like to swing a battle-ax or brandish a sword may only flourish a trowel or lay a wreath. The prince's rightful occupation's gone.

Is it any wonder that the Prince of Wales now and then feels so fed up with this unending routine that when he rides to the hounds or takes part in a race he picks out a horse that he hopes will throw him and so end it all? If the prince does not witch the world with noble horsemanship perhaps this is the reason. There is a limit beyond which the prospects of laying another corner stone makes even a prince see red. And the worst of it is, he must look pleasant about it. He is as bound to be at a certain place by a certain time as any slave of a time-clock. No matter what temptations assail him to take a day off, he must set his face against them with a gracious smile; he is due at Little Puddlington at 2:30, to open the new infirmary.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

IN THE DARK.

In the utter blackness of things,
When the hand gropes for the wall
Or to a table-corner clings
As if to move on were to fall.

In that time of terrible doubt
When footways familiar grow strange
And all that was straight seems twisted about.
As if chairs and doors change.

And you're lost in the place you know best
Without guide post or mark,
Seeking somewhere a button, which pressed,
Will give light in the dark.

So I'd feel, I believe, night and day
Were I left here to grope
Dreading death every step of the way
Without faith, without hope.

It Is Better to Wear No Jewel at All Than to Be Content With an Imitation.

By ROBERT QUILLEN

I THINK there is nothing more beautiful than the love of a boy and a girl.

When older people—those people without understanding, to whom life is like ashes in the mouth—when these ridicule the love of a boy and a girl it seems to me a sacrilege.

"A boy and girl affair," they say; "it will not last."

Perhaps not. But whether the boy and the girl are separated and grow apart as development brings them new standards and tastes, or whether their love grows deeper and stronger with the mellowing years until their heart roots entwine and they become inseparable comrades, in either case they will look back upon their first love and treasure the memory of it as obscure and broken old men treasure the memory of some triumph the world has long forgotten.

Love is the province of youth, as Spring is the time of mating. Young love is the finest and truest love because it takes no account of cost nor considers the world's opinion. It never is mercenary or calculating. It is ennobling—purifying—inspiring—a passion so near to the sublimity of religion that few can tell where one ends and the other begins.

Fortunate are those—blessed are those—who love while they are young!

But young or old—soon or late—blessed are those to whom love comes!

Wait for it. Though you feel lonely and cheated while waiting, still wait for it. Though life offer you many bribes—a fevered passion that will burn itself out, a mating of convenience, an exchange of romance for bread and butter—still wait for love.

To accept less is to sell your birthright. For though the cynics scoff and wise men coin words of science to explain it away, still love remains the greatest prize and the richest experience life has to offer.

It may never come to you, but it is better to wait in vain than to close your door against it by accepting something less. The prince doesn't stop if he finds you entertaining commoners.

THE ONCE OVER

By H. I. PHILLIPS

RADIO DESCRIPTION OF AN INTERNATIONAL YACHT RACE.

"Well, here we are folks, at the international polo—at the international yacht race, I mean. This is, as you probably know, a contest between the American boat, Whichone—the American boat Enterprise, I should say, and the Shamrock V, owned by that well-known Irish sportsman whose name is a household word, Sir Alfred Lipton!

• • • •

"That was my mistake, folks—the name is, of course, Sir Arthur Lipton, but it is very hazy up here and it is very easy to make mistakes. Perhaps a little description of the rival shells—I mean of the rival yachts, would be appropriate right here. They are about the same length, the Whirlwind being a little longer if anything, than the Shamrock. The American yacht has a much larger mainmast, the total area of which is 4,861 square feet, but the Enterprise—the Shamrock, I should say, has a larger foresail made of aluminum, I think.

• • • •

"One of the Vanderbilts, Gen. Cornelius Vanderbilt, if I am not mistaken, will sail the Weetamoe and Earl Sande will have the mount on Gallant Fox . . . Beg pardon . . . It is very difficult to get everything straight out here on account of the way the ship is pitching about . . . It seems that Capt. Ted Heard will have the mount on the English boat and that, as I said a few moments ago, the Enterprise will be driven by one of the Rockefellers . . . John D., jr., I think.

• • • •

"The race will be run . . . sailed, I mean . . . over a track 9 miles southeast of Ambrose Channel lightship . . . just a minute . . . there is evidently some mistake there . . . 9 miles southeast of Breton Reef lightship. That's where we are now, folks, 9 miles southwest of Barnegat lightship, which is off Newport, Conn. Each race will be 30 furlongs . . . 30 fathoms . . . just a second . . . 30 miles. A mile, you know, is the equivalent of a British knot. In some countries it is called a spinnaker.

• • • •

"Both elevens are now jockeying . . . both boats are now jockeying for the start. The American yacht has her mainsail, jib, staysail and binnacle set, while the Shamrock is using only her mainmast, lee scuppers and balloon bilge. There is a lot of action on the Shamrock now. The crew is raising another sail. I think Sir Arthur . . . I mean Sir Thomas, is going to hoist his forward struts. Yes, he is clewing down the beam now. This is a big surprise to everybody. It shows that the Shamrock is going to risk everything on a long beat to halyards.

• • • •

"They're off! This is the start of the first international cup race off Hatteras lightship, folks! The Question Mark got over the line first, but the Enterprise, sailed by Gen. Atterbury, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, is creeping up on her. The Shamrock seems to be having trouble luffing her starboard shrouds. Both boats are on the staysail tack now, and doing very well at it. There's something going on up forward on the American boat, the Resolute, now . . . J. Pierpont Morgan, skipper of the defender, is having his battens leeched. This is a very daring maneuver.

"This sure is exciting, folks. By changing his battens that way the American skipper stole a march on the Shamrock. He is leading now by seven or eight spinnakers. Sir Thomas is having trouble with his winch. It appears to be flapping.

• • • •

"Look! The American boat is falling behind! Something's gone wrong on her! I can't say exactly, but it looks to me as if her galley had ripped! Yes, her galley has ripped, folks, and there's a big tear in the topgallant taffrails! They are running up the scuttle butts now in a desperate attempt to hold her spindrifts in place! Gosh, but this is exciting!

• • • •

"This is the international yacht race, folks, between the Athletics and the Shamrock, 9 miles off the Baffin's Bay lightship. &c., &c."

BRITISH CONSENSUS.

Eric Pedley, he is deadly,
Fleet is Winston Guest;
There's no stopping Mr. Hopping—
Hitchcock is a pest!

Ima Dodo was terribly disappointed at the international polo matches. "I wanted to see Sir Thomas Lipton ride," she complains, "and he didn't play at all!"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Congress Must Exercise Its Own Judgment as to Proposing Repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Candidates for Congress who announce their purpose to be governed by referenda in the submission of constitutional amendments thereby declare their willingness to cooperate in the disregard of an important principle of the Constitution itself. Article V of that instrument reads as follows:

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures in two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress . . . . ."

The abdication of the right of exercising judgment on the part of would-be legislators is a departure from a basic principle in our plan of government. This is particularly true in the case of candidates for the Senate. I quote from "An Exposition of the Constitution of the United States," by A. O. Wright, written in 1880. Speaking of the senatorial term, he says:

"The term of office of a senator is six years, three times as long as that of a representative, and half longer than that of President. The object is to raise senators above the whims and caprices of their constituents, so that they may consult their solid interests, rather than their immediate wishes."

Although here bluntly stated, I think this is the view of constitutional lawyers generally. Is not this a suitable time for consideration of fundamentals, in view of the current desire of many to lynch the eighteenth amendment with little regard for consequences?

Suburban Movie Fans Disturbed by Prospect of Losing Music Features in Washington Theaters.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The news that the movie theaters, of Washington, contemplate dispensing with their orchestras is of more than passing interest to your correspondent who, like many other government clerks, commutes from a rural town.

In my community, there is a theater which dispenses sound pictures in the most approved manner, and, for this type of entertainment, can equal any of the theaters in a large city; however, in common with many of my neighbors, I frequently spend an evening in one of the Washington playhouses, because of the distinctive features afforded by the orchestras and stage shows. If these are to be eliminated, the city theaters will have nothing to offer which is, in any way, more attractive than that which can be found in our own little theaters.

The views herein expressed are not merely those of the writer, but of her entire coterie of acquaintances. The Washington theaters would lose our patronage, not by reason of any decided feelings on our part anent any disputes which they might have with their musicians, but because they would fail to supply anything to justify the inconveniences with which the rural patron must contend.

My village is but one of the many in the vicinity of Washington which contribute their quota to its theater audiences. Surely the movie owners will think twice before destroying this element of their patronage.

A Police Chief Nearby Has Rare Night-Blooming Cereus — If It Blooms This Fall.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have a large night-blooming cereus plant that has for the past three years blossomed, first in mid-summer, and again in late fall. In July of last year it had five blossoms. Later on, in the fall, it had eighteen one evening and one the next night, making nineteen in all. Many people came to see it.

My cereus begins to open about 9 o'clock, and is at its best at about midnight. This year, however, owing to the hot weather, it has so far had only three blossoms. I am not sure that it will bloom again this fall, as it requires plenty of water.

Wets and Drys Ought to Deal in Facts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to commend your editorial on "The Wet and Dry Issue." It would be difficult to crowd more political facts into the same space.

I wonder if you don't feel a bit wicked in thus dashing down wet hopes. Some ardent wets, because a few dry representatives were defeated in the primaries of the past week, were just on the point of stepping into the promised land of legalized booze.

But I suppose it is one legitimate function of an editor to set forth the hard facts of life and thus prevent the raising of too many false hopes by those disposed to be unduly optimistic. COLUMBUS BRADFORD.

Protests Against Attempt to Prevent Razing of Poli's Theater — Old Shacks Must Go.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The agitation to secure an injunction to prevent the destruction of Poli's Theater is entirely out of place. The south side of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street has for too many years been in need of improvement to tolerate such eyesores as now exist. A fountain and a grassy plot would be far more appealing to the eye. Washingtonians have long enough tolerated ancient and dilapidated structures.

Tear down the old shacks! A new age is dawning, and the bicentennial is coming. R. DARGEL.

EVENTS OF INTEREST IN SOCIETY CIRCLES OF CAPITAL

Patrons' List Gathered for Drama Season

Mrs. Thomas, Miss Dunlop Interest Society in Belasco Plays.

WITH the intention of interesting the Olympians of Washington society in the forthcoming visit of the Professional Players, Mrs. Sidney Thomas, a former president of the Junior League, and Miss Katherine Dunlop have been "signed up" to conduct a preliminary campaign before this group from Philadelphia opens its season here at the Belasco Theater on October 6. At present they are busying themselves making up a patrons' list and they hope to round up considerable support for the "better plays," which the Professional Players aim to produce. In this era of "talkies," interest in the theater has somewhat flagged, but these two dynamic young women may be depended upon to whip up a good deal of enthusiasm.

The idea of making contact with society has been tried out with great success in other cities by the Professional Players. In Philadelphia last year Mrs. Fitzwilliam Sargent and Mrs. Upton Favorite, both "Social Registerites," carried on the work with great success and in Boston Miss Rebekah Hobbs carried on a similar campaign. Mrs. Sargent flew to Washington from Philadelphia Saturday to assist in the organization of the campaign here.

A series of six plays will be given in Washington, with A. A. Milne's "Michael and Mary," featuring Madge Kennedy, as the initial performance.

Yacht Races Draw Number From Capital

Secretary of Navy Adams Heads Washingtonians at Cup Event.

Secretary of the Navy Charles Francis Adams heads the group of Washington nautical folk who have assembled at Newport to witness the thrilling America's Cup races which have drawn all American society to the famous resort. Secretary Adams, it will be recalled, is a noted yachtsman and was popularly known as "Commodore" before he accepted his present post in the Hoover administration.

A number of Washington hostesses at Newport for the summer entertained for the first race on Saturday, notably Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, with her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock, aboard their yacht Jackeen III, while Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, wife of the Speaker of the House, was among the guests of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt on their yacht Winchester.

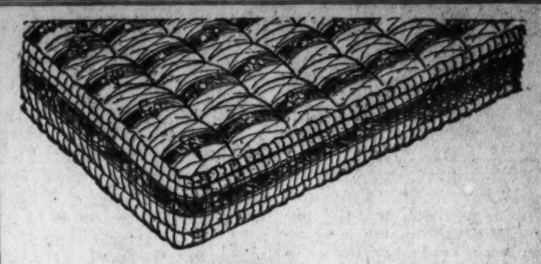

Other Washingtonians noted at the yachting parties and luncheons were Rear Admiral William S. Sims and his daughter, Miss Adelaide Sims, who were with the J. Pierpont Morgans, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Seymour Lowman, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Davis 3d.

To the Washington contingent, there was a note of sadness, due to the recent death of Col. Robert M. Thompson, always a genial host at such occasions, who had returned from Europe shortly before he was fatally stricken, in order to be present at the America's Cup races.

Mr. and Mrs. D. A. McArthur, of Gary, Ind., have been at the Dodge Hotel for several days during their stay in Washington.

COST OF ENFORCEMENT.

Prohibition Commissioner Woodcock's request for an increase of $2,000,000 in the appropriation for enforcement activities is reasonable and should be approved. With the additional appropriation he would increase the field force by 500 men and improve the efficiency of the recently established enforcement college. At present the dry enforcement agencies are working on a $15,000,000 appropriation, of which $9,000,000 is allotted to the Prohibition Bureau. The Coast Guard will require an appropriation equal to this year's allotment, and there is little possibility of reducing the appropriation for the industrial alcohol bureau. Hence, if the requested increase is granted the total allowance for enforcement will have to be increased. Congress may be depended upon to make a fuss over any attempt to increase the allowance for enforcement, but prohibition is on trial, and no reasonable requests having as their purpose the improvement of the enforcement machine should be refused.

Two million dollars and 500 men will have to be spread thin to be distributed through the extensive machine which the Prohibition Bureau must maintain. Fortunately, however, the new regime is relieved of certain activities for which considerable sums have been expended and to which a large force has been detailed. Upon his return from a mid-Western inspection tour last week, Director Woodcock reported that the prohibition situation in Detroit was better than it had ever been, largely because of the working of the newly enacted Canadian liquor export regulations. Canada has undertaken to prevent the export of liquor to the United States, with the result that American prohibition authorities can diminish the force that has been maintained on the Canadian border, distributing it throughout the country or concentrating it where needed.

Five hundred additional agents added to those who may now be withdrawn from the Canadian border should enable the newly reorganized Prohibition Bureau to demonstrate whether or not it will be more successful than its predecessors in bringing about a truly dry era. If the bureau is not granted the additional facilities it deems necessary it will have a convincing excuse for its failure to enforce prohibition. The blame will then fall upon Congress.

POPULATION OF ATLANTA.

Seldom has civic pride been more dramatically exemplified than by the suit filed by residents of Atlanta to compel the Director of the Census to list its population at 360,692 instead of 270,367. The petition recites that the Census Bureau refuses to include in the enumeration of Atlanta the population of certain boroughs that were recently annexed and incorporated into the City of Atlanta. Their total population comes to 90,325. Atlanta, says the complaint, will be irreparably damaged if it is officially declared to be a city of 270,367 instead of 360,692 population.

Atlanta's sad story calls attention to the plight of other municipalities that are prevented by circumstances from claiming the population that is supported by their industries or that attaches itself to their outskirts. In Montgomery, Prince George and Arlington counties, for example, dwell thousands who are Washingtonians in every sense of the word, but who can not be counted as Washingtonians because they reside in communities that are not part of the District. Across the river from Philadelphia lies Camden, a municipality of almost 150,000, the population of which could never be claimed by the City of Brotherly Love because it dwells in New Jersey. Cincinnati has half a dozen municipal satellites in the Kentucky towns that are situated immediately across the Ohio. The two Kansas Citys constitute a sizable community, but from the population standpoint they must remain divided. There are any number of twin communities separated by State lines that are urban units, but the Census Bureau is forced to regard them as separate cities.

The Atlanta case is somewhat different. There no State line separates the disputed boroughs from the parent municipality. Possibly the courts will direct the Census Bureau to accord Atlanta the 360,692 population to which she claims she is entitled. The other population units, however, are not so fortunate. They have to content themselves with setting up "metropolitan areas" for the purpose of impressing the world with their size and, hence, their importance.

APPROACHES TO WASHINGTON.

After ten years of delay New York avenue is to be extended from Florida avenue to Bladensburg road. A total of $40,000 is available for the grading, and District officials hope to secure an appropriation in the 1931 budget for surfacing this new approach to Washington. Inasmuch as the District has owned nearly all of the property to be used in this extension for ten years, it is difficult to understand why the improvement has been delayed.

When completed New York avenue will be an excellent boulevard leading into the heart of the city from Baltimore and other Eastern cities. The center strip in Bladensburg road is to be paved from New York avenue to the District-Maryland line, and the Baltimore boulevard is also being widened.

Most American cities have inadequate approach highways. Most of the thoroughfares leading to and from the larger cities were constructed before the days of motor traffic. It is absurd to try to cure congestion when busy highways converge and pour their rapidly moving traffic into narrow streets that meander through great cities. Washington is fortunate, indeed, to be able to add another broad approach without spending millions to buy up valuable property.

An important new approach was recently opened by the extension of Rhode Island avenue. Traffic that has concentrated on this new street will be relieved by the improvement now contemplated. Extension of other boulevards leading to the National Capital will become necessary, however, as motor traffic increases. Washington is a pivotal center for a large area, and a favorite spot for millions of tourists. It is time to look to the future and to formulate plans that will save Washington from the distress that has befallen dozens of American cities as a result of clogged arteries of travel. The survey of traffic in this metropolitan area, which is contemplated by the Washington regional highway committee, should be of much value in determining the location of approach boulevards for future needs.

WOMEN WORKERS.

Figures released by the director of the census indicate that more than 10,000,000 women are engaged in gainful occupations. The tendency for women to seek employment outside of their homes is steadily growing stronger.

The Census Bureau has made a special study of women in industry, covering a 50-year period. It finds that more than 20 per cent of all persons engaged in gainful occupations are women, and that 24 per cent of all women may be classed with the working population. Nearly 50 per cent of all unmarried women are earning money, and one married woman out of every eleven is a wage earner. "Whatever opinions may be held as to the proper sphere of women," the bureau concludes, "the fact is that, to a considerable extent, woman's place today is no longer in the home."

Studies of this kind are particularly interesting because they are the source of the assertion that America has attained prosperity only by putting its entire population to work. Women are being taken out of the home, the critics say, and are forced into factories and offices. It is taken for granted that employment of women means a breaking up of home life, despite the fact that less than one-fourth of all women workers are married. It is true that 37 per cent of the married women employed do not lead a normal home life, but there is nothing to indicate that their home life is disrupted.

There is no justification for the assumption that a greater share of the world's work is being imposed upon the weaker sex. An increase in the employment of women does not mean an increase in their burdens. It does mean that work has been transferred from the home to the factory where it can be done more economically. Women who once slaved at home or in sweat shops without being classed as workers now put in shorter hours at factories or offices, and become an integral part of that class known as the gainfully employed. A considerable share of the world's work has always been done by women. It is only because the division of labor between the sexes is less sharply defined under modern economic conditions that women are thought to bear a greater share of the burden.

Less than 40 per cent of the population of the United States is engaged in either production or service. Calling attention to this fact in a recent address, Dr. William M. Steuart, director of the census, said: "We may well wonder how the money spent so lavishly in America is earned." Compared with other countries and with past ages the percentage of the population engaged in labor is small. Furthermore, hours are much shorter and the comforts of living have multiplied many fold.

REGULATING OIL PRODUCTION.

The Government decided more than a year ago that it could do little to curb overproduction of petroleum which had engulfed the oil industry in difficulties. A decision from the Attorney General put a halt to the American Petroleum Institute's program of voluntary curtailment, and the problem was handed over to the States. Legislatures in the principal oil-producing States have acted, and now it appears that the problem may be handed back to the Federal authorities—this time to the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court of Oklahoma has upheld the oil and gas conservation law of that State by quashing a writ that would have restrained the corporations commission from enforcing its proration orders in the south Oklahoma City field. This field is under drastic limitations. When a new well comes in it is allowed to run for 24 hours, then it must be closed for 65 days, after which it is allowed to run at 16 per cent of capacity. The large producers favor this limitation as the only possible means of avoiding overproduction and enormous overhead expenses. All owners and lease holders in fields under such regulations share the output on a pro rata basis. Oil is drawn out of the ground only as fast as the market warrants, and the usual scramble to sink a dozen wells where only one is needed is thus avoided.

An independent producer attacked the validity of the statute under which these regulations are carried out. It is contended that the Legislature had no authority to authorize such limitation, and that proration amounts to depriving a man of his property without due process of law, which is forbidden in the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. It seems inevitable that the controversy will be carried to the Supreme Court.

A decision is of special importance because of the influence it may have on litigation in other States that have enacted similar laws to conserve their oil. Should these proration statutes be upset by a Supreme Court decision the most important achievement of the oil conservation forces in recent months would be undone. The Government has found itself incapable of handling this perplexing problem. It remains to be seen whether the States have sufficient control over private production to solve it.

Senator Caraway offers an ingenious explanation as to why he happens to be an "ex" Arkansas farmer, but maybe the real reason is that he has spent most of his time in recent years in Washington.

Too bad the hurricane did not hit Florida, so that it could be charged up against Hoover.

WOES OF A PRINCE

From the Boston Transcript.

We are not surprised to learn that the Prince of Wales, weary of the interminable round of laying corner stones and unveiling monuments, now stands up in his boots and declares definitely that he will make no public engagements for the next seven weeks. If any hospital beds must be opened let the patients open them themselves and hop in. If somebody must listen to the honeyed words of provincial lord mayor No. 768, let his wife do it. As for himself, he proposes to loaf and invite his soul until next autumn when, as Bagman Extraordinary to the British Empire, he packs up his kit and starts on his mission of good will to the countries of South America.

We don't know who first coined the phrase "noblesse oblige," but it is safe to say that he never meant it to mean that a prince's rank laid upon him the duty of engaging in those occupations which nowadays seem to be expected of an heir apparent. We can well imagine with what disdain Edward the Black Prince, with what Homeric laughter Prince Hal, crony of Falstaff, would accompany their royal descendant during his itinerary of an ordinary day. How they would shake their heads at the degeneracy of the times. In their age the chief business of a prince was to be, like Kipling's Fuzzy-Wuzzy, a first-class fighting man. If war broke out he put on his shining armor and with mace and battle-ax went forth to defend his cause; prepared to die if need be in the midst of his knights and squires. No parliamentary enactments hampered him in the exercise of his authority nor kept him safe at home while his subjects went out to fight for him.

How can we account, then, for the change that has taken place in royal occupations, that offers us the curious paradox of a prince stripped of all political power being more carefully guarded in his person than any feudal prince ever was? If we may believe Cervantes, it was the introduction of firearms into warfare. A prince was willing enough to be cleft to the chin in fair hand-to-hand combat with his equals, but he was made uneasy by the thought that he might be killed by a chance shot from the musket of a base-born varlet skulking behind a distant hedge. And so, little by little, gunpowder put an end to chivalry. Individual skill and strength and bravery availed nothing against the new weapons, and the last prince to risk his life side by side with his men-at-arms was Charles II, who gallantly led a cavalry charge at the battle of Worcester in 1651. Just two hundred years later, Albert, prince consort of Queen Victoria, opened the Crystal Palace exhibition of 1851, and then and there established a custom that has grown to be recognized as one of the obligations resting upon the heir apparent The hand that would like to swing a battle-ax or brandish a sword may only flourish a trowel or lay a wreath. The prince's rightful occupation's gone.

Is it any wonder that the Prince of Wales now and then feels so fed up with this unending routine that when he rides to the hounds or takes part in a race he picks out a horse that he hopes will throw him and so end it all? If the prince does not witch the world with noble horsemanship perhaps this is the reason. There is a limit beyond which the prospects of laying another corner stone makes even a prince see red. And the worst of it is, he must look pleasant about it. He is as bound to be at a certain place by a certain time as any slave of a time-clock. No matter what temptations assail him to take a day off, he must set his face against them with a gracious smile; he is due at Little Puddington at 2:30, to open the new infirmary.

IN THE DARK.

In the utter blackness of things,
When the hand gropes for the wall
Or to a table-corner clings
As if to move on were to fall.

In that time of terrible doubt
When footways familiar grow strange
And all that was straight seems twisted about.
As if chairs and doors change.

And you're lost in the place you know best
Without guide post or mark,
Seeking somewhere a button, which pressed,

So I'd feel, I believe, night and day
Were I left here to grope
Dreading death every step of the way
Without faith, without hope.

It Is Better to Wear No Jewel at All Than to Be Content With an Imitation.

By ROBERT QUILLEN

I THINK there is nothing more beautiful than the love of a boy and a girl.

When older people—those people without understanding, to whom life is like ashes in the mouth—when these ridicule the love of a boy and a girl it seems to me a sacrilege.

"A boy and girl affair," they say; "it will not last."

Perhaps not. But whether the boy and the girl are separated and grow apart as development brings them new standards and tastes, or whether their love grows deeper and stronger with the mellowing years until their heart roots entwine and they become inseparable comrades, in either case they will look back upon their first love and treasure the memory of it as obscure and broken old men treasure the memory of some triumph the world has long forgotten.

Love is the province of youth, as Spring is the time of mating. Young love is the finest and truest love because it takes no account of cost nor considers the world's opinion. It never is mercenary or calculating. It is ennobling—purifying—inspiring—a passion so near to the sublimity of religion that few can tell where one ends and the other begins.

Fortunate are those—blessed are those—who love while they are young!

But young or old—soon or late—blessed are those to whom love comes!

Wait for it. Though you feel lonely and cheated while waiting, still wait for it. Though life offer you many bribes—a fevered passion that will burn itself out, a mating of convenience, an exchange of romance for bread and butter—still wait for love.

To accept less is to sell your birthright. For though the cynics scoff and wise men coin words of science to explain it away, still love remains the greatest prize and the richest experience life has to offer.

It may never come to you, but it is better to wait in vain than to close your door against it by accepting something less. The prince doesn't stop if he finds you entertaining commoners.

THE ONCE OVER

By H. I. PHILLIPS.

RADIO DESCRIPTION OF AN INTERNATIONAL YACHT RACE.

"Well, here we are folks, at the international polo—at the international yacht race, I mean. This is, as you probably know, a contest between the American boat, Whichone—the American boat Enterprise, I should say, and the Shamrock V, owned by that well-known Irish sportsman whose name is a household word, Sir Alfred Lipton!

• • • •

"That was my mistake, folks—the name is, of course, Sir Arthur Lipton, but it is very hazy up here and it is very easy to make mistakes. Perhaps a little description of the rival shells—I mean of the rival yachts, would be appropriate right here. They are about the same length, the Whirlwind being a little longer if anything, than the Shamrock. The American yacht has a much larger mainmast, the total area of which is 4,861 square feet, but the Enterprise—the Shamrock, I should say, has a larger foresail made of aluminum, I think.

• • • •

"One of the Vanderbilts, Gen. Cornelius Vanderbilt, if I am not mistaken, will sail the Weetamoe and Earl Sande will have the mount on Gallant Fox . . . Beg pardon . . . It is very difficult to get everything straight out here on account of the way the ship is pitching about . . . It seems that Capt. Ted Heard will have the mount on the English boat and that, as I said a few moments ago, the Enterprise will be driven by one of the Rockefellers . . . John D., jr., I think.

• • • •

"The race will be run . . . sailed, I mean . . . over a track 9 miles southeast of Ambrose Channel lightship . . . just a minute . . . there is evidently some mistake there . . . 9 miles southeast of Breton Reef lightship. That's where we are now, folks, 9 miles southwest of Barnegat lightship, which is off Newport, Conn. Each race will be 30 furlongs . . . 30 fathoms . . . just a second . . . 30 miles. A mile, you know, is the equivalent of a British knot. In some countries it is called a spinnaker.

• • • •

"Both elevens are now jockeying . . . both boats are now jockeying for the start. The American yacht has her mainsail, jib, staysail and binnacle set, while the Shamrock is using only her mainmast, lee scuppers and balloon bilge. There is a lot of action on the Shamrock now. The crew is raising another sail. I think Sir Arthur . . . I mean Sir Thomas, is going to hoist his forward struts. Yes, he is clewing down the beam now. This is a big surprise to everybody. It shows that the Shamrock is going to risk everything on a long beat to halyards.

• • • •

"They're off! This is the start of the first international cup race off Hatteras lightship, folks! The Question Mark got over the line first, but the Enterprise, sailed by Gen. Atterbury, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, is creeping up on her. The Shamrock seems to be having trouble luffing her starboard shrouds. Both boats are on the staysail tack now, and doing very well at it. There's something going on up forward on the American boat, the Resolute, now . . . J. Pierpont Morgan, skipper of the defender, is having his battens leeched. This is a very daring maneuver.

"This sure is exciting, folks. By changing his battens that way the American skipper stole a march on the Shamrock. He is leading now by seven or eight spinnakers. Sir Thomas is having trouble with his winch. It appears to be flapping.

• • • •

"Look! The American boat is falling behind! Something's gone wrong on her! I can't say exactly, but it looks to me as if her galley had ripped! Yes, her galley has ripped, folks, and there's a big tear in the topgallant taffrails! They are running up the scuttle butts now in a desperate attempt to hold her spindrifts in place! Gosh, but this is exciting!

• • • •

"This is the international yacht race, folks, between the Athletics and the Shamrock, 9 miles off the Baffin's Bay lightship. &c., &c."

BRITISH CONSENSUS.

Eric Pedley, he is deadly,
Fleet is Winston Guest;
There's no stopping Mr. Hopping—
Hitchcock is a pest!

Ima Dodo was terribly disappointed at the international polo matches. "I wanted to see Sir Thomas Lipton ride," she complains, "and he didn't play at all!"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Congress Must Exercise Its Own Judgment as to Proposing Repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Candidates for Congress who announce their purpose to be governed by referenda in the submission of constitutional amendments thereby declare their willingness to cooperate in the disregard of an important principle of the Constitution itself. Article V of that instrument reads as follows:

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures in two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress . . . ."

The abdication of the right of exercising judgment on the part of would-be legislators is a departure from a basic principle in our plan of government. This is particularly true in the case of candidates for the Senate. I quote from "An Exposition of the Constitution of the United States," by A. O. Wright, written in 1880. Speaking of the senatorial term, he says:

"The term of office of a senator is six years, three times as long as that of a representative, and half longer than that of President. The object is to raise senators above the whims and caprices of their constituents, so that they may consult their solid interests, rather than their immediate wishes."

Although here bluntly stated, I think this is the view of constitutional lawyers generally. Is not this a suitable time for consideration of fundamentals, in view of the current desire of many to lynch the eighteenth amendment with little regard for consequences?

Suburban Movie Fans Disturbed by Prospect of Losing Music Features in Washington Theaters.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The news that the movie theaters, of Washington, contemplate dispensing with their orchestras is of more than passing interest to your correspondent who, like many other government clerks, commutes from a rural town.

In my community, there is a theater which dispenses sound pictures in the most approved manner, and, for this type of entertainment, can equal any of the theaters in a large city; however, in common with many of my neighbors, I frequently spend an evening in one of the Washington playhouses, because of the distinctive features afforded by the orchestras and stage shows. If these are to be eliminated, the city theaters will have nothing to offer which is, in any way, more attractive than that which can be found in our own little theaters.

The views herein expressed are not merely those of the writer, but of her entire coterie of acquaintances. The Washington theaters would lose our patronage, not by reason of any decided feelings on our part anent any disputes which they might have with their musicians, but because they would fail to supply anything to justify the inconveniences with which the rural patron must contend.

My village is but one of the many in the vicinity of Washington which contribute their quota to its theater audiences. Surely the movie owners will think twice before destroying this element of their patronage.

A Police Chief Nearby Has Rare Night-Blooming Cereus — If It Blooms This Fall.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have a large night-blooming cereus plant that has for the past three years blossomed, first in mid-summer, and again in late fall. In July of last year it had five blossoms. Later on, in the fall, it had eighteen one evening and one the next night, making nineteen in all. Many people came to see it.

My cereus begins to open about 9 o'clock, and is at its best at about midnight. This year, however, owing to the hot weather, it has so far had only three blossoms. I am not sure that it will bloom again this fall, as it requires plenty of water.

Wets and Drys Ought to Deal in Facts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to commend your editorial on "The Wet and Dry Issue." It would be difficult to crowd more political facts into the same space.

I wonder if you don't feel a bit wicked in thus dashing down wet hopes. Some ardent wets, because a few dry representatives were defeated in the primaries of the past week, were just on the point of stepping into the promised land of legalized booze.

But I suppose it is one legitimate function of an editor to set forth the hard facts of life and thus prevent the raising of too many false hopes by those disposed to be unduly optimistic.

Protests Against Attempt to Prevent Razing of Poli's Theater — Old Shacks Must Go.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The agitation to secure an injunction to prevent the destruction of Poli's Theater is entirely out of place. The south side of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street has for too many years been in need of improvement to tolerate such eyesores as now exist. A fountain and a grassy plot would be far more appealing to the eye. Washingtonians have long enough tolerated ancient and dilapidated structures.

Tear down the old shacks! A new age is dawning, and the bicentennial is coming.

EVENTS OF INTEREST IN SOCIETY CIRCLES OF CAPITAL

Patrons' List Gathered for Drama Season

Mrs. Thomas, Miss Dunlop Interest Society in Belasco Plays.

WITH the intention of interesting the Olympians of Washington society in the forthcoming visit of the Professional Players, Mrs. Sidney Thomas, a former president of the Junior League, and Miss Katherine Dunlop have been "signed up" to conduct a preliminary campaign before this group from Philadelphia opens its season here at the Belasco Theater on October 6. At present they are busying themselves making up a patrons' list and they hope to round up considerable support for the "better plays," which the Professional Players aim to produce. In this era of "talkies," interest in the theater has somewhat flagged, but these two dynamic young women may be depended upon to whip up a good deal of enthusiasm.

The idea of making contact with society has been tried out with great success in other cities by the Professional Players. In Philadelphia last year Mrs. Fitzwilliam Sargent and Mrs. Upton Favorite, both "Social Registerites," carried on the work with great success and in Boston Miss Rebekah Hobbs carried on a similar campaign. Mrs. Sargent flew to Washington from Philadelphia Saturday to assist in the organization of the campaign here.

A series of six plays will be given in Washington, with A. A. Milne's "Michael and Mary," featuring Madge Kennedy, as the initial performance.

Yacht Races Draw Number From Capital

Secretary of Navy Adams Heads Washingtonians at Cup Event.

Secretary of the Navy Charles Francis Adams heads the group of Washington nautical folk who have assembled at Newport to witness the thrilling America's Cup races which have drawn all American society to the famous resort. Secretary Adams, it will be recalled, is a noted yachtsman and was popularly known as "Commodore" before he accepted his present post in the Hoover administration.

A number of Washington hostesses at Newport for the summer entertained for the first race on Saturday, notably Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, with her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock, aboard their yacht Jackeen III, while Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, wife of the Speaker of the House, was among the guests of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt on their yacht Winchester.

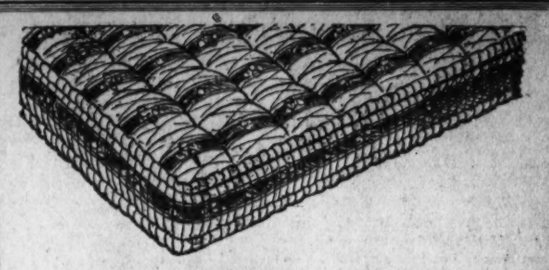

Other Washingtonians noted at the yachting parties and luncheons were Rear Admiral William S. Sims and his daughter, Miss Adelaide Sims, who were with the J. Pierpont Morgans, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Seymour Lowman, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Davis 3d.

To the Washington contingent, there was a note of sadness, due to the recent death of Col. Robert M. Thompson, always a genial host at such occasions, who had returned from Europe shortly before he was fatally stricken, in order to be present at the America's Cup races.

Mr. and Mrs. D. A. McArthur, of Gary, Ind., have been at the Dodge Hotel for several days during their stay in Washington.

Miss Ann C Milner, of Minneapolis, is at the Dodge Hotel, accompanied by Miss Mary L. Cook, also of Minneapolis.

DIAL FLASHES

By ROBERT D. HEINL

TEN days ago radio men caught what they hope is an indication that the Metropolitan Opera is moving closer to an alliance with radio, according to the New York Times.

The sale by Otto Kahn of the property in West Fifty-seventh street between Eighth and Ninth avenues purchased by him about three years ago as a site for a modern home for the Metroplitan gave the broadcasters renewed hope that Mr. Kahn might accept for the opera an invitatiton to join the Radio City, of which John D. Rockefeller, jr., is the landlord.

The yacht races for the America's Cup will continue throughout this week on the days the weather permits.

A CENSORSHIP maintained by Argentine authorities on cables led newspapers and press associations to get around it by using the radio telephone which thus far has not been molested. The cost of wireless telephone calls from Buenos Aires to New York is $10 a minute.

John J. Raskob, chairman of the Democratic national committee, will discuss "The Tariff From a Business Man's Point of View" tonight (WRC, 7 p. m.).

BETWEEN eight and ten million pupils are expected by Walter Damrosch to participate in his musical appreciation hour for school children, the third season of which begins next month.

The concerts will be available to all communities east of the Rocky Mountains.

It will be "governor" here also, "governor" there in a program dedicated to the American Legion next Thursday during which the governors of six States are to speak. There will be an elaborate musical background, and during the presentation no less than nine cities will be heard from.

Lou Little, former Georgetown football coach now with Columbia University, will be guest speaker on Ted Husing's air period next Saturday evening (WMAL, 5:15 p. m.).

Announcers say the greatest of their worries while announcing a program is manipulating the control box. The NBC control board has 22 buttons, and the announcer must have a thorough knowledge of the working of each. The control box has come to be known ironically as the "announcer's delight."

Herluf Provensen and Blaine Cornwell, of the announcerial staff of Station WRC, will make their debut as radio entertainers on Wednesday afternoon (3.10 o'clock).

Dare Interprets the MODE

New York, Sept. 14.

GLOVES are so lovely these days! I have just, with admirable fortitude, succeeded in resisting some delightful copies of Louis XIV gloves developed in beige, pale blue, pale rose and yellow suede, with elaborate handwork of embroidery and braid decorations.

Thees gloves were quite short and to the wrist, and fastened not with buttons but with a gold cord, and were exact copies of the gloves worn for evening by the famous beauties at the time.

But some plain long black suede gloves, and white kid gloves, and beigy pink ones of that shade called "chaire" I didn't try to resist, since these long gloves are indispensable to evening wear elegance!

• • • •

Certain women, and by no manner or means the most elegant, insist upon "sweeping" through the streets in flowing gowns that touch their ankles. But Paris fashion designers are adamant in their attitude of moderation, and nary a gown that has to touch more than 3 square feet of sidewalk en route from the doorway to the motor car is shown in their salon for daytime wear.

Since the very beginning of the vogue for long skirts, the women who once swore they would never forego the freedom of knee-length dresses have consistently been going the designers one better, much to the designers' despair. Such famous people as Worth and Patou admit difficulties in persuading their clients to wear dresses as short as six inches below the knees, which is where all but their very formal afternoon models end. Oh, well!

How is your fall hat situation? No matter how good it is, I'll bet you that one of the three hats that I had made for me by my clever little modiste in Paris, and that Mamzelle copied and tells you how to make yourself in this week's illustrated leaflet would please you. She selected one of the knockabout sports, traveling, street or business type; another of a more dressy type, suitable for informal afternoon and general wear; and for a third, the large black velvet one cut in the new way, which gives it such a lovely droop around the face. Better send your stamped, self-addressed envelope to the Dare Department of The Washington Post for the directions for making these hats, because you'll wish you did if you don't!

Lucile Paray is one of the Paris couturiers who is perhaps better known in Paris than in America. And this is to be regretted, because she designs such entirely smart and practical things, such as the dark red tweed dress (on the left) I illustrated for you today. The tweed had tiny black and very little white threads in it, and then this clever couturier trimmed the dress with dark red velvet, very successfully. There was a red leather belt, too! And another of her simple and entirely wearable ideas is expressed in the little suit I sketched, which she made for Mme. Andre Citroen. 'Twas of black cloth, and delicately trimmed with ermine, and showing a white satin blouse.

WORK ON BRIDGE

MISPLAYED HANDS I HAVE MET.

In the above hand which was played at Auction Bridge, South bid one Club and North one No Trump which held the contract.

If it had been played at Contract Bridge North, after South's Club bid probably would have bid two No Trumps. South three No Trumps or three Diamonds and, in the latter event, North three No Trumps.

In the play, with North the Declarer, East led his fourth best Heart and West's Ace won. The Heart was returned and North false-carded by taking with the King. North then led a small Club, as he had eight in his two hands, and finessed. West won and led a Heart which North took with the Queen. Three Clubs were run, the last won by North's Ten; and then a Diamond was led by North. East played the Queen and South the Ace. One Spade now was taken in and then a second Diamond led. East won with the King and ran his two remaining Hearts, so that East and West won three Hearts, one Diamond and one Club, saving game.

THE CORRECT PLAY.

When playing to trick 3 Declarer should have seen the possibility that the King and Queen of Diamonds and the King of Clubs were wrong (i. e., just as they lay); and should have led Diamonds before Clubs. That would have taken the sure entry that the King and Queen of Diamonds would furnish out of the East hand before North was forced to give up command of the Hearts. It would do no harm to have West's King of Clubs win after the blocking Heart was played, because West would not have a Heart to lead, the adverse Heart distribution having been shown by East's lead of the Trey and play of the Deuce to be the dangerous 5-3.

Play the hand over for yourself and see why the play given would have saved game.

What Today Means to You

By MARY BLAKE

"VIRGO."

IF September 15 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9 a. m. to 10:30 a. m., from 4 p. m. to 5 p. m. and from 10 p. m. to 11:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 7 a. m. to 8:30 a. m. and from 2 p. m. to 3:30 p. m.

If you have a grouch against the world and all its beings on this date, blame the astrological influences. Make decisions and meet clients during the p. m. hours of the day. A proposition revealed—consider it carefully and not in haste.

The child born on this September 15 will have a very active, inquisitive mind, which will need proper feeding at a very early age. It will develop into a constructive thinker and worker, and will "take" to school work. It will need to be taught self-control for a hasty temper.

Your capacity for strong feelings, bitter sufferings and true delight makes you a man or woman alive in a way that the cautious and unadventurous can never be. You run the gamut of your emotions, without being their slave. You know what it is to feel love and pity, to have passionate loyalties, to deny neither tears nor laughter their place, to have enthusiasm in both likes and dislikes. It was a true saying of the Greeks that those whom the Gods love die young—not young in years, but young in spirit.

You could be called vain, if it is vain to always want to look your best. Your effort to make a good appearance repays you in many ways. It gives you self-respect, and invites the respect and admiration of a critical world. You are, however, neither a dandy nor a self-conscious conceited woman. You yourself greatly judge others by their external manners and dress.

You are very painstaking, conscientious worker, and you never turn out a slovenly, half-finished job. You do not dawdle over things—you like to get through the things on hand, so as to take up something else, either work or play. You seldom let go of your temper, and settle your grievances after your tempest of anger has past. You are jealous as a lover, but not enough so to make you foolish. A Taurus person makes you a good companion.

Successful people born September 15:

James Fenimore Cooper, novelist.
Horatio W. Parker, composer.
Daniel Alden Reed, congressman.
William Howard Taft, twenty-seventh President, United States.
George Hollister Campbell, railroad official.

Uncle Sam's Home Hints

SUN BATHS FOR OLDER CHILDREN.

(Children's Bureau, Department of Labor.)

Though sun baths are of primary importance for the baby, they are also of great value to the "runabout" and the preschool child. Sun bathing is more important for the child than sea bathing, and it is accessible everywhere in spring and summer. Clothing for sun baths should be low in the neck, short in the legs and without sleeves. An ordinary bathing suit or bathing trunks, a sleeveless slip or a set of cotton underwear may be worn.

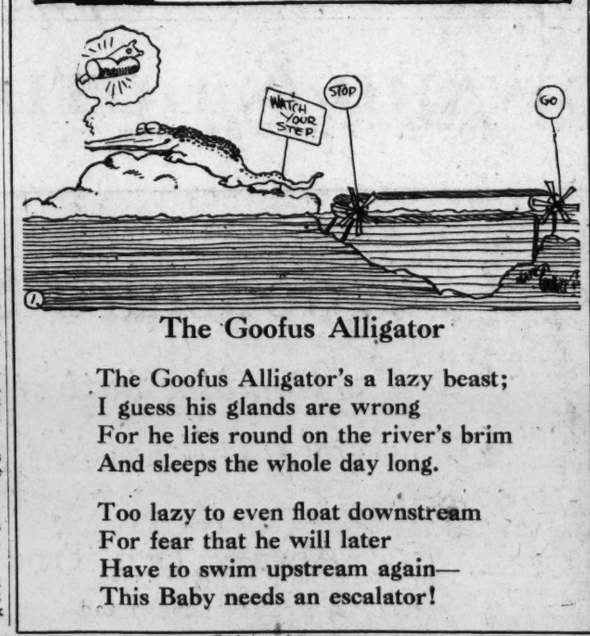

Sun baths may be given in the fields, in a city back yard, on a roof or on a porch, as well as on a beach. Care must be taken not to let the child's skin become sunburned severely. The best time for sun baths is the morning.

Tanning is the goal for which to strive: the process must be gradual. The exposure should begin with the face and arms and increase slowly in duration and in the extent of the body surface exposed until the whole body is exposed for two hours a day.

Post Town House Wins Praise of Husbands

Expressions of praise were showered on The Washington Post Town House yesterday when hundreds of persons took advantage of the fine day to make a visit to the newly opened exhibit residence at 1822 Irving street northwest. The arrangement of the rooms, fittings, furniture, as well as the exterior features of the home were all the center of flattering comments.

The Town House will be open from 10 a. m. until 9 p. m. daily. Motorists can drive on Mount Pleasant street and turn left on Irving street.

The Goofus Alligator

The Goofus Alligator's a lazy beast;
I guess his glands are wrong
For he lies round on the river's brim
And sleeps the whole day long.

Too lazy to even float downstream
For fear that he will later
Have to swim upstream again—
This Baby needs an escalator!

SHOW GIRL — Something to Wonder About — By J. P. McEvoy and J. H. Striebel

MISS MYSTERIOUS - - By Larry Lawrence

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

A co-ed at the State university, affectionately known as Babe, gets a letter from her guardian, Clement Forseith, of Seattle, Wash., saying he has lost all her money and is going to commit suicide. He also says that her real name is not Thelma Townley, as she has always believed. But he gives no further clew to her identity. She confides to a friend, Violet Rimmel. A handsome young man from the West Coast appears and says he knows of her trouble and proposes that she marry him as a way out. A telegram warns her against this man, who uses the name Morgan. At a fraternity dance Pete Jones, Milwaukee senior, proposes. Babe turns him down. He says he has seen suspicious characters following her. The same night she is kidnaped. Pete rescues her from the kidnapers, takes her to his father's summer home. The captured kidnapers escape and Babe and Pete have to flee from them. They spend the night in hiding in a small shack. Getting back to Milwaukee the next day, Babe sends Pete back to school, saying that she must go West and fight to learn her real name, but she decides to stay in Milwaukee and get a job. She learns that her room at college has been robbed and two old letters taken. After days of search she fails to land a job. Coming into the lobby of the hotel where she is staying under the name of Theodora Thomas, she is seen by a man who offers her a strange job. She accepts. They go to a gambling resort and this man, who uses the name Mac, tells her to vamp a man he indicates. The man is Morgan. She goes to his apartment and he says that Forseith is not dead. Morgan then makes violent love to Babe and she accidentally shoots him. She is found in his apartment by Mac, who searches the room and finds the brooches that were stolen from Babe. Morgan disappears and Mac tells Babe that he is searching for a murderer. By comparing notes they decide it is Forseith and they are certain that it was Forseith who had her kidnaped. Babe decides to get her picture in the papers as a lure to Forseith. She feigns amnesia and is taken to the Emergency Hospital for mental observation. Gus, leader of the kidnapers, learns this and drives to the hideout of a Chicago gangster to get Forseith, known as The Duke. Mac is waiting outside the hospital to protect Babe when he suddenly realizes that he is in love with her. An automobile draws up.

Mac sees the Duke go into the hospital. He follows. The Duke tries to fool authorities into believing he is the uncle of the mystery girl, but fails and leaves. He gets a look at Mac and decides that he is a menace. The next morning Pete sees paper with Babe's picture in it.

He gets Violet and they race to Milwaukee. Babe is released by police when she "recovers" her memory at the sight of them.

CHAPTER XVI.

"Tell us, Babe, what on earth made you lose your memory?" Violet demanded.

"I can't talk now," Babe replied. "Not here. It is a long story. You both deserve to know all. I'll tell you when we get to my hotel."

Pete had said little, but he was asking himself many questions.

Why had Babe stayed here in Milwaukee when she had said she was going West? Why had she deliberately tried to fool him? Did she dislike him?

His elation at her escape from the police had already been brought low by the dark thoughts that were molesting him.

As they walked through the hotel lobby Babe was conscious of a number of eyes following her. She heard several whispered remarks. "That's the girl."

But she held her head high and marched to the desk to get her key. Once in her room Babe started talking slowly.

"I'm still so worked up I can't talk straight. Oh, you're wonderful, both of you. Just wonderful friends. I'll tell you, but I don't know where to begin. Forseith is in Milwaukee."

This was like dropping a bombshell. Pete and Violet both exclaimed at once, "I thought he was dead."

"No," Babe went on. "He's not dead. He's right here in Milwaukee. That's why I pulled this amnesia stunt."

Again they gasped. "Stunt, stunt. Then you were just fooling. You hadn't lost your memory?"

"Of course not. I had to get my pictures in the paper. I wanted to let Forseith see them. I wanted him to find me." Their eyes were popping out by now. Babe was creating a sensation, but she was trying to seem matter of fact about it all.

Babe weighed her words as she went on, trying to decide whether to mention Mac or not. She wondered if she had the right to say anything about him, but he settled this himself.

There was a knock. Babe did not call, "Come in," but stepped outside to see who it was and walked straight into Mac. He did not say a word, but put both arms about her and bending down a little kissed her. She was taken entirely by surprise. She wanted to resist, be angry, but there seemed to be no resistance left in her. Instead of fighting she returned his kiss. Still not a word had been spoken. She felt like she wanted to stay there forever, but the hall of a well-filled hotel was no place to be nestling in a man's arms. And Pete—Pete, self-sacrificing Pete, was just a step away, behind that door.

Not until this thought came to her did she feel guilty. A flush spread over her face, but when she spoke she found that she could control her voice. "Mac, two of my best friends are here. Come in and meet them."

They walked in together. Babe did not attempt to explain the delay, but introduced Violet and Pete. The men shook hands and as they did so seemed to be measuring each other. They all sat down, Violet and Babe on the bed. There were several attempts at general conversation, the weather, the early spring, and then talk lagged. The situation was becoming intolerable when Mac spoke up.

"I think we are all interested in the same subject," he said. "Why should we avoid it? Miss Thomas tells me that you are her very good friends."

Pete looked up with wonder when Mac used the name, "Miss Thomas," but he said nothing. He did not know she had taken that name when registering. That was puzzle enough to him, but the man's familiarity with her secret was even more disconcerting to him. It was as he feared, then. This man was a rival and apparently a very serious one. He straightened himself in his chair, seeming to expand.

"Miss Thomas and I are working together in an effort to get justice," Mac went on. He did not explain his statement. "I came here as soon as I could to see how she had endured the difficult position in which she was placed. You helped her and I want to thank you both."

That made Pete's blood seethe. What right had this man to thank him for helping Babe. Why, he was ready to go to the ends of the earth to do anything to help Babe, because he loved her, because it was his duty, his right to help her. His fists clinched.

Mac noticed this. He read the signs. He was right. Here was a man, nearly ten years younger than himself, probably much more eligible, who loved the girl he loved.

What should he do? Step aside? No, he could not do that. His heart, hungry for love, starved for love all these years that he had denied himself the companionship of women, would not permit that now.

Violet felt the tenseness of the situation. She sensed the cause for it, too. Level headed Violet, still burning with curiosity to know all that had happened, decided to do what she could to break the strain. What was more practical than to suggest a bite to eat? "I have an idea," Violet broke in. "Let's all go some place and eat. I'm starved, absolutely starved. I forgot all about eating until we got up here and knew that Babe was safe, but now I could eat a toasted whale."

The suggestion had the desired effect. Pete suddenly realized that he was hungry, too. "Why, neither of us has had a bite, have we, Violet?" he chimed in.

"Perhaps we had better have something served here," Mac said.

"No, there is hardly room," Babe protested. "I am hungry, too." She was anxious to get a word alone with Mac to see if he had traced Forseith. She did not want to ask in front of the others, not knowing how much Mac was willing to have known.

But as they left the hotel Pete took her arm and it remained for Mac to escort Violet. Mac could not help noticing what a beautiful girl she was. Not the same sort of beauty as Babe, of course, but certainly a charming young woman. He marveled that he was noticing this now, when only a few minutes before he had been on the verge of telling Babe that he loved her—had, in fact, done more than that—had showed her that he loved her. He was still tingling with the ecstasy of that kiss.

Pete was talking low to Babe, pushing ahead as they got to the street. "Who is that man? What is he to you?"

"Pete, I don't think you should ask me those questions." Babe was peeved for a moment. "You put me in a bad position. I owe you such a lot of gratitude——"

"Oh, gratitude be damned," Pete said. "I don't want gratitude. You know that. I want you. I love you. I—I. Oh, Babe, why do you torture me?"

"Pete, I don't want to torture you. You know that. You know how much I appreciate——"

"Who wants appreciation? Who is that man?"

"I can't tell you any more than I have. His name is Mac. We are working together."

"Do you love him?"

"Is that fair?"

"Certainly it is fair. I love you and I have told you so. Now this man comes between us. I'll—I'll——" He gritted his teeth.

"You'll do nothing but be a man," Babe said. "Don't talk like a sophomore." But she was no longer peeved. She was glad to have Pete show spunk like this.

"Why are you working with him? I wanted to stay and help you. I would have done anything, you know it. I still will. School can be hanged."

Babe started to answer, but Mac and Violet had caught up to them. Violet noticed now that Mac was not paying a great deal of attention to her. He seemed to be on the alert, watching every one who approached or passed. And he insisted on keeping close to the couple ahead.

Pete turned into a restaurant and they all followed. When taking seats Mac maneuvered to get one facing the door. Pete was seating Babe with her back to the entrance when Mac interrupted. "Miss Thomas, will you please sit here?" Pete scowled.

When they were seated, Babe beside Mac, he leaned toward her and whispered. "There has been a short fellow following me all day. He is outside now. See if you can recognize him." Babe nodded and putting the menu card up before her, as if studying it, tried to see through the window to the street. Several men were standing outside and there was a constant moving. She could not see any one who looked familiar at first, but after watching for some minutes she saw a rather small man walk by and cast a glance inward.

"That's the man," she almost shouted.

"What man?" Pete asked.

"The small fellow who grabbed me. You know, Pete."

Pete was on his feet. "I'll get him," he said, and started toward the door, but Babe called, "No, Pete, no. Sit down."

"If they are still after you we might as well nab one of them and teach him a lesson," Pete said.

"Don't do anything foolish," Babe chided. "I want to be caught again. I believe it is the only way I'll ever find out what they want with me."

Mac started to shout against this, but Babe didn't give him time to say anything.

"I probably should have recognized that oily tongued man as an uncle. I am sure he is Forseith. I would have cried on his neck and called him uncle if I had been sure that Mac was ready to follow. But now we are in the same boat we were in before I had that wild scheme."

"No, we're not," Mac insisted. "We have proved that Forseith is somewhere in the State and we know that he is still bent on getting a hold of you. And I now have two of his men spotted, the one who just passed and a big, ugly brute."

"That's Gus," Pete broke in, his resentment at Mac forgotten for a second at his interest in what was being said.

"Yes," Babe said. "That must be Gus." She turned to Mac and told how they had learned the name. Then speaking more directly to Violet she told how Pete had bluffed the gunmen with a wrench, had saved her.

"I don't suppose modest Pete has told you all this, has he, Violet?"

"No he didn't tell me. All he did was to ask questions about you."

Pete blushed as Babe painted a glowing picture of him in the role of hero. Mac, who had heard the story, listened attentively, nevertheless, and seemed ready to give due credit. In fact, he said a few words of praise and said them in a way that Pete knew he was sincere.

"I have been doing this man an injustice," Pete thought. "But I am right. He is in love with Babe and I'll not give her up. I'll fight for her to the last ounce of fight in me. But I'll have to fight square. This man is on the level."

"Pete, you are a darling," Violet exclaimed as Babe finished telling of his reckless bravery in her defense and Babe felt a pang of jealousy shoot through her. It was so poignant that she came within a breath of making a remark but stifled the desire in time. Then she was ashamed of herself.

"What kind of a woman am I?" she asked herself. "I kiss one man passionately and within an hour I am burning with jealousy for another."

As her conscience would not be still on the matter she told herself that she had no intention of marrying any one. Not, at any rate, until she had accomplished her purpose, and this seemed in the far distant future, if ever.

At last Babe said, "What are we going to do, Violet, Pete?"

"I am in favor of staying here in town and watching you for a while," Pete said. "Can't tell what you will do next?"

Violet didn't answer, and Babe again found that she must send Pete back to school. "Even if you do want to stay out, fail to graduate when you are this close to it, you should think of Violet," Babe said. And saying it hurt a little. She didn't want Pete thinking of Violet. Not too much, anyway. But she went on, "You've got to go back. You have arrived in time to get me out of a bad situation once more, and I guess if I am in trouble again you'll manage somehow to know it."

Mac said nothing. He didn't like the idea of Pete feeling that he was Babe's protector, but he realized that Pete had prior claim on the protecting job.

It took some persuasion on Babe's part to get Pete to agree to return that afternoon, but she managed it.

They went back to her hotel, talked a little longer, and then Pete and Violet left to drive to the university.

As soon as they were gone Mac said, "You must move out of this hotel. Forseith and his men know you are here and I suppose they know your room number and the name you are using by now."

Babe was reading a paper she had just purchased. "I guess every one knows now," she said, and pointed to the story on the front page.

MYSTERY GIRL IS W. U. CO-ED.

Sammy had been busy. He gave the name she had used in registering. He told of her history at the school. But he did not mention the man in the striped pants. Babe wondered why.

"What difference does it make now where I stay?" she asked. "I was serious when I said I was going to play into their hands. I am. Mac, I am going to learn Forseith's game or get killed in the attempt. That's how desperately in earnest I am."

CENSUS UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES ARE ATTACKED AS TOO LOW

Ex-Labor Commissioner Sees Misunderstanding

Million New Applicants for Jobs Excluded, He Says; Lay-Offs Omitted; 1930 Percentage Probably Greater in 1915.

By ROYAL MEEKER
Formerly U. S. Commissioner of Labor Statistics.
(Irving Fisher Service).

Special to The Washington Post.

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 14.—The Bureau of the Census has announced that in April, last, 2,508,151 persons usually employed, able to work and seeking work were unable to find jobs of any kind. The totally unemployed in April, as reported by census enumerators, constituted about 2 per cent of the entire population, 5 per cent of the "gainfully employed" and some 7 per cent of those employed outside of agricultural and animal husbandry.

Students of employment problems will at once put these figures in comparison with unemployment figures published by the U. S. Census, the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, trade unions and private investigators for previous years. After all the utterances about "technological unemployment" (a new term for a very old thing) aggravated by the business slump, a mere 5 per cent of workers unemployed appears far too low, especially since Prof. Paul H. Douglas, after a most elaborate study of unemployment, calculates that over the 30 years, 1897-1926, the unemployed averaged 10.2 per cent of all workers in manufacturing, mining and transportation. Even in the excessively prosperous years 1918, 1919 and 1920 he estimates the unemployed at 4.8 per cent, 5.3 per cent and 6.1 per cent, respectively; while in 1914 they were 15.3 per cent; 1915, 14.4 per cent; 1921, 21.7 per cent; 1922, 15.8 per cent, and 1924, 10.3 per cent. The percentages of unemployment found in 41 cities by the U. S Bureau of Labor Statistics in 1915 and by private investigators in Columbus, Buffalo and Philadelphia in subsequent years are in nearly every case very much higher than the census figures for 1930.

Unemployment Narrowly Defined.

At first glance it would appear that the census understates the number of the unemployed. These figures must be carefully analyzed and interpreted, else they will give quite misleading notions about the extent and seriousness of unemployment and the unreliability of unemployment statistics in general. A careful analysis of this first census report indicates that while the figures are probably correct, they invite misunderstanding and have been grossly misinterpreted because of the narrowly limited definition of unemployment used in the census. Those who use these statistics should know what they mean.

First, only persons who were "usually employed" were included. Thus all work-seekers, who have never found a regular job, were automatically excluded. About 1,000,000 new applicants for work knock at the gates of industry each year. Those who seek work and never find it are just as truly unemployed as those who have found jobs only to lose them. Unfortunately, no accurate estimate can be made from census figures of the number and percentage of the unemployment in this class of job-seekers. Second, all persons laid off, but whose names are not stricken off the payroll, were excluded. Those workers were regarded as still employed, although they were without work, and, except in rare instances, without any compensation from their nominal employers. The census will report later upon lay-offs, but in the meantime, the census figures for the totally unemployed are quite incomplete.

Ill Jobless Excluded.

Third, those unemployed on account of illness were excluded. The percentage who are jobless on account of illness is considerable, and the social significance of this group is enormous. Before the census figures can be compared with the figures obtained in other surveys, correction should be made for sickness unemployment.

Fourth, the census figures are for those totally unemployed and not for the amount of unemployment. It is to be regretted that no attempt was made to ascertain the duration of total unemployment. It is a matter of most vital importance to know whether the unemployed have been without work a day, a week, a month, three months or a year. To record the number out of a job on a particular day once in ten years is of very slight value in attempting to formulate a program for industry and the State to deal with the problems of unemployment.

Fifth, the exclusion of part-time unemployment from the census figures removes them still further from the realm of true unemployment figures. Part-time unemployment is always very important in times of depression and more so than usual at the present time.

When the limitations of the census figures are taken into account they do not contradict, but rather corroborate the unemployment figures obtained by other agencies.

Reports by Cities.

Fortunately, the Bureau of the Census has issued a later news release, announcing the numbers of unemployed workers found in cities having 100,000 or more inhabitants. This report by cities enables us to make much more accurate comparisons with the figures obtained by other agencies in these same cities.

Fifteen cities included in the census report for April, 1930, were included in the survey conducted by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics in April, 1915. The census of 1930 shows 3.57 per cent of the total population of these cities as without jobs of any kind, which is equivalent to about 8.9 per cent of all workers. The 1915 survey showed 12.9 per cent of workers in these fifteen cities without any work.

The accompanying chart shows the comparisons city by city, and for the fifteen cities combined. Certain discrepancies are evident, especially in Bridgeport and Cleveland; but when the figures are interpreted they support the accuracy of both surveys. The 1915 figures include all workers laid off and sick. Part-time workers were classified separately and are not included in the totally unemployed. Probably if lay-offs and sickness were included in the census figures, the percentage of unemployment in 1930 would be considerably higher than that in 1915, which accords with common impressions.

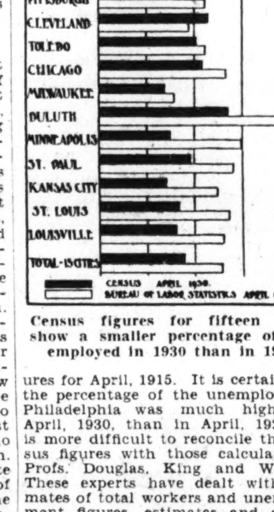

Philadelphia Survey Comparable.

This conclusion is supported by the surveys of unemployment made in Philadelphia in April, 1929. The totally unemployed, including those sick and laid off, was found to be 10.4 per cent, almost identical with the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics figures for April, 1915. It is certain that the percentage of the unemployed in Philadelphia was much higher in April, 1930, than in April, 1929. It is more difficult to reconcile the census figures with those calculated by Profs. Douglas, King and Wolman. These experts have dealt with estimates of total workers and unemployment figures, estimates and guesses from a variety of sources. It would be astonishing if their figures did agree very closely with those of the census.

Incomplete and open to misunderstanding as the unemployment census of 1930 is, it marks the definite recognition of the existence of unemployment and the need to gather more exact information as to its extent.

The next step is to provide for current monthly surveys of unemployment in all industries and occupations so that employers, workers, students and statesmen may know the size of the problem which they must solve in order to stabilize business and prevent industrial unrest and revolution.

(Copyright, 1930.)

Census figures for fifteen cities show a smaller percentage of unemployed in 1930 than in 1915.

INDUSTRIAL STOCKS CONTINUE ADVANCE

TRADINGS SHOW GAINS

By E. W. DIEFENDORF
(Irving Fisher Service).

The price index of all-industrial stocks continued last week an advance that began following the August 12 low through September 10. It was then at 137.7, having gained by 9 per cent in a monht, to a level less than one index point below the July 28 high. A bear attack last week brought the stock price level off by less than 1 per cent to the week's close of 136.5, showing a net change over the week of 1.9 per cent.

The group indexes last week indicate similar movement, with the exception of the building supplies and motors groups, which suffered sufficiently in the bear attack to cause their level to drop below the preceding week's close by 1.9 per cent in building materials and 0.8 per cent in motors.

The coppers group was outstanding in its gains, closing last week up by 6.7 per cent, while the stores group rose by 5.2 per cent, utilities by 3.5 per cent, auto accessories by 2.8 per cent and foods, tobacco, machinery, miscellaneous, chemicals, steels and electrical equipment by 2 per cent each.

The groups of stores, radio, building supplies, chemicals, electrical equipment and office equipment stocks at last week's high were more than 13 per cent above their August lows; while the groups of building supplies, chemicals, electrical equipment, foods, machinery, steels, stores and tobacco groups topped their July highs to make the record since the June low.

Tradings Up 28 Per Cent.

The average daily value of tradings in all stocks on the New York Stock Exchange reached $121,200,000 last week, an increase by 28 per cent over the preceding week's low level of $94,300,000.

Sixteen of the twenty groups had increased average daily value traded last week, with ten groups up by more than $1,000,000 each. The electrical equipment group rose by $6,000,000, a 50 per cent rise; the utility and coppers groups rose by $4,000,000 each, and the motors group by $3,000,000.

Of the four groups whose value traded last week was off from the preceding week's low, the radio and theaters group was outstanding, off by $3,000,000, or a 25 per cent drop. The rails, office equipment and steels groups dropped by less than $500,000 each.

Foreign Stock Levels Steady.

Stock price levels on foreign bourses held steady last week, with the London index off by 1.1 per cent, Paris by 0.7 per cent and Berlin by 0.3 per cent. This movement was encouraging, following the preceding week's sharp advance from recent lows in London and Paris.

Semiinvestment stock prices came into the lead last week by an advance of 2.1 per cent, in spite of their slight drop at last week's close; at the same time investment and speculation groups gained by 1.7 and 0.9 per cent, respectively.

That there is a groundswell in stock market prices is manifest from the fact that the semiinvestment group, now in the lead, represents the bulk of the market. It includes nearly three-fourths of the total common industrial stocks.

The all-industrials index, influenced by the heavily weighted investment stocks, can show considerable activity while price levels remain stationary in the semiinvestment group. Once this group, which is always slow to take up activity, assumes the lead, then the price-level of the whole market is on the rise.

Investment Group Gains.

At last week's high on September 10, the investment group of stocks at 180.3 was 1.3 per cent above the July 28 high, having gained by 10 per cent since August 12; the semiinvestment group, at 109.1, was 1.9 per cent below the July 28 level, having gained by 8 per cent since August 15, and the speculative group, at 102.9, was 2.4 per cent below the July 28 level, and up by 12 per cent from the August 12 low.

Below are shown index numbers of prices of common industrials on the New York Stock Exchange, arranged in classes derived from Moody's ratings:

ANOTHER NEW HIGH MARKS BOND PRICES

Upward Trend in Market Is Noticed, With Increased Trading Values.

GOVERNMENTS ARE OFF

The price-level of all bonds on the New York Stock Exchange is again rising after the slight drop of 0.08 per cent from August 27 to September 3. From September 3 to last week's close the index advanced by 0.21 per cent, reaching the 1930 peak of 102.0 on Friday.

With 80 per cent of the 70 bonds in the Iving Fisher selection closing last week either steady or up in price from the preceding week's close, the average daily value of tradings in all bonds on the New York Stock Exchange rose by 9 per cent to the high since the week ended June 27. Trading in bonds dropped off by 30 per cent from the week of June 27 to August 8, and during the past five weeks has gained by 28 per cent.

Second grade rail bonds, up by 0.55 per cent last week, have been largely responsible for the advance in the all-bonds price level during the past eight days. Industrial and utility bond price-levels rose by 0.30 and 0.27 per cent, respectively, last week.

COMMODITIES DROP IN WHOLESALE MART

Decline in Gasoline Level Counteracts Rises in General List.

DOLLAR IS BUYING MORE

The index of all wholesale commodities dropped by 0.12 per cent last week, following two weeks in which the index made considerable gains over the recent low of 82.8 the week ended August 23. Of the total number of price changes last week 56 per cent were increases and 44 per cent decreases. The movement of the market in general was up, but a sharp drop in gasoline was sufficient to counteract the larger number of rises.

The wholesale price level has been steadying since the week ended July 18, with the index fluctuating less than one index point in eight weeks.

The purchasing power of the dollar rose by 0.06 per cent to 119.8 (1926 average equals 100).

Agricultural products completed the third successive week of rising price levels with last week's gain of 0.11 per cent, while farm products dropped by 0.23 per cent, following two weeks of sharp rises. Foodstuffs rose by 1.5 per cent.

Cotton, corn, oats, beef and hogs were largely responsible for the drop in farm products, as apples, coffee, flour, lard, pork, short ribs and potatoes brought the foodstuffs index up.

Nonagricultural price levels dropped by 0.49 per cent. In this division hides and leathers were up by 4.0 per cent, the entire list being strong, metal products rose by 0.33 per cent, and miscellaneous products were up by 0.16 per cent. The outstanding drop in nonagricultural products was in the fuel and lighting group, which was off by 2.0 per cent, gasoline taking a 14 per cent drop. The textiles, building materials and chemicals groups were off on small individual price changes.

The purchasing power of farm products continued to rise by 0.56 per cent, having maintained a rising trend for three successive weeks.

The strength in last week's market was found in raw materials, whose index rose by 0.74 per cent. Semimanufactured and finished goods dropped by 0.38 and 0.58 per cents, respectively.

"Give me the money instead"—often that's what the woman of twenty-five years ago said when her husband suggested paying out premiums for more Life Insurance for her benefit.

"Take all you can afford," says the modern woman. "Then you won't be worrying about me and the children."

ONE doesn't have to sell the idea of Life Insurance to the modern woman. She is well-versed in its far-reaching benefits. She urges her husband to put his Life Insurance in trust. With us as trustee, she will have no investment worries, and will enjoy the comfort of dependable income with extra funds for extra needs.

Which way does your wife look at this? How does the idea look to you? Wouldn't you like to have full particulars from our Trust Officer?

ROBINS REGAIN LEAD WINNING AS CARDS DIVIDE DOUBLE BILL

Elliott Hurls Brooklyn to 8-3 Win Over Reds.

Dodgers Bunch Blows Off Rixey, Kolp and May.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Sept. 14 (A.P.).—The Brooklyn Robins won their tenth straight victory and advanced to the league lead as the Cincinnati Reds suffered their tenth straight defeat here this afternoon when three of Dan Howley's pitchers bowed to the weight of Brooklyn bats. The final score was 8 to 3.

The Reds got all of their runs in the first inning, when they hammered Hollis Thurston out of the box, but Jim Elliott pitched shut-out ball for the last eight and two-thirds innings to hang up a brilliant victory.

Robins to Miss Frederick.

Although the Robins continued their spurt, they were hard hit by the loss of a second center fielder in two days. Johnny Frederick, hurt in Saturday's game, may be out for the balance of the season with an injury that is diagnosed as a split muscle in his right thigh. Eddie Moore, the versatile utility man of the Robins, who had to leave second base last week because of a charley horse, played a brilliant game in Frederick's place yesterday until his leg went bad again. Rube Bressler, the regular Brooklyn left fielder, is laid up with a broken finger.

Moore opened the Brooklyn attack in the first inning by beating out a perfect bunt, starting the Robin rally of two runs, in the third, by brilliant base running. Moore stretched an ordinary single into a two-base hit, the opening wedge for a four-run rally of the Robins. He had to leave the game shortly afterward.

The Robins bunched their ten hits off Rixey, Kolp and May for almost the maximum effectiveness. The Reds went down fighting, however, making no fewer than five double plays in the course of the afternoon.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept 14 (A.P.).—The billion dollar spectacle of the sea furnishing background for the America's Cup yacht racing duel, will be resumed tomorrow with indications pointing to better weather conditions and high hopes held out that Shamrock V will yet make a fight of it against the defender, Enterprise.

A fair day with a whole sail breeze from the southwest was forecast tonight for the second race of the series, to be run off around a 30-mile triangular course, with the first leg a beat to windward and two 10-mile reaches for the remaining legs home.

Heavy showers early today were followed by clearing weather and an eight-knot breeze. A rising barometer tonight indicated continued clear weather.

Second Race Test For Defender.

The second race well may be a decisive test and show whether Enterprise was the better, faster boat that she seemed to be yesterday in leading Shamrock to the finish by two minutes 52 seconds, in the opening race to leeward and windward. It takes four victories to clinch the series.

So far, with only one race in somewhat fluky winds on which to base their opinions and conjecture, yacht-racing experts have discovered nothing whatever on which to alter their previous belief that Enterprise would walk off with the series and keep the cup where it has been since the yachting war of 1851.

Debate Over Handling Of Shamrock.

There was no little debate today over whether Shamrock was as expertly handled as she might have been under conditions that resulted in a very monotonous parade out to sea and back again. Some thought the chaHenger's skipper, Capt. Ernest Heard, allowed himself to be seriously outamarted on the getaway; furthermore that Shamrock's sails were too heavy for light weather and that she failed to capitalize her advantage when Enterprise was all but overhauled an hour out on the leeward run.

Others figured that the outcome was strictly the result of Enterprise being the better boat, sail for sail, and that tactics had little or nothing to do with it on the whole, because of the extremely simplified conditions which called for no more than two or three tacks throughout the last 15 miles to windward. The race tomorrow is scheduled for 10:40 a. m. (E. S. T.), depending on wind and weather.

District A. A. U. Names New Officers Tonight

Officers of the District of Columbia Association of the Amateur Athletic Union will be elected tonight at a meeting of the association in the Jewish Community Center, starting at 8 o'clock.

John D. O'Reilly, veteran track coach of Georgetown University, has been nominated for the presidency. No other candidate has been mentioned, it is reported. O'Reilly was selected by the association's nominating committee.

Ferrell Loses Third in Row—22,000 See Game.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—The League-leading Athletics blanked the Cleveland Indians in their two-game series when they won the second game today, 7 to 1.

The Indians failed to score until the eighth, when Averill made the run after he, Morgan and Hodapp had singled.

Earnshaw Goes Route as Ferrell Is Beaten.

Earnshaw, who started the game yesterday for Philadelphia, pitched the whole route today, while Wesley Ferrell, whom the Indians had intended to place against Lefty Grove, the Philadelphia ace, weakened in the seventh and was replaced in the eighth by Belve Bean. This was the

Rochester Clinches International Flag

New York, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—The Rochester Red Wings clinched their third straight International League pennant today by winning the first game of their double-header from Montreal, 7 to 6, while Baltimore dropped its first game to Reading, 10 to 5.

The victory was Rochester's 103d of the season, while the Orioles after their defeat could only reach a total of 102 victories by winning all their remaining games.

G.U. GRIDMAN RUSHED TO HOSPITAL

Costello, Candidate for Quarter, Seriously Ill.

HILLEARY COSTELLO, sophomore aspirant for the quarter back position on the Georgetown University Football Team, was removed from the Hilltop camp at Point Lookout, Md., to Georgetown Hospital yesterday morning suffering with a high fever induced by an illness which at a late hour last night had not been diagnosed.

Costello, taken ill on Friday, was immediately ordered to bed by Trainer Harry Crowley. What seemed a slight indisposition at first began to grow worse, and he developed a temperature that reached alarming proportions by yesterday morning.

"Resting Comfortably," But Very Ill.

He was rushed to Washington and the hospital by Mrs. Tom Mills, wife of the Georgetown head coach, in the latter's automobile. He was reported "resting comfortably" last night, but in a serious condition.

The loss of Costello leaves the Georgetown squad with but two quarter backs during its preseason training period. Johnny Scalzi, regular signal caller last fall, and Russell Danieu, reserve half back in 1929, are the two.

A light workout was indulged in by the Hilltoppers yesterday, but today, starting their third week in camp, they will undergo another of the gruelling scrimmages held last week.

CROWDER WEAKENS IN 10TH AS ROOKIE HURLER TRIUMPHS

MOORE POWER

Reynolds' Hit After Watwood's Triple Decides Fray.

Nats Now 7½ Games Behind as Macks Beat Indians.

Special to The Washington Post.

CHICAGO, Sept. 14.—Having dropped two rather loosely played contests as their earlier efforts, the White Sox gave 10,000 faithful Sabbath fans the worth of their admission money this afternoon by winning, 2 to 1, in a ten-inning pitchers' battle, from the second-place Nats in the third game of their series. As the Macks won, the Nats dropped seven and a half games behind. The end came after Al Crowder and Jim Moore had gone along smoothly as the opposing moundsmen.

Crowder, his teammates having given him a single run a early as the second inning, had held the White Sox to six safeties during the first nine innings, all of them singles, and in only one session, the second, had the Comisky men been able to bunch two of them.

Sox Knot Count In Second.

The second-inning rally had given the Sox a single run to tie the score, after they had made one hit and been held scoreless in the first. After another hit in the third, Crowder pitched four hitless sessions, then gave one hit in the eighth and another in the ninth.

Jim Moore, whose joining with the White Sox only two weeks ago makes him a rookie in fact, but whose right arm seems weel suited for major league competition, had been even more effective than Crowder. After having turned the Nats back hitless in the first and having seen a walk, two sacrifices and a single produce a Washington tally in the second, he had yielded two singles in the third and one in the fourth. From that time through the ninth not a hit was made off the youthful right-hander.

His record suffered in the tenth, however, Hayes beating out a roller down the third base line for a single, which opened the inning. Hargrave flied to left field, but the Nats made a positive threat when Crowder caught a slow ball on the end of his bat and dumped a weak double in left field that sent Hayes to third. Moore gave Myer an intentional pass to fill the bases and the infield drew in, hoping for a double play that would end the dangerous situation.

Kerr Throws Hayes Out At Plate.

Rice sent a hot grounder down to Kerr and Kerr scooped it up before it had left the grass to throw home and force Hayes at the plate, leaving the bases still full. Manush sent another hot grounder at Kerr and Kerr threw him out at first to end Washington's last chance for victory.

The tenth opened inauspiciously for the White Sox when Moore flied to right field and Cissell sent an easy roller down to Judge. With two out, however, Johnny Watwood pulled the first ball Crowder gave him around to right field, and the sphere rolled all the way to the fence to allow Watwood to get around to third base. Reynolds, next up, took a strike and two balls, and then sent a ringing single to left field between Cronin and Hayes that allowed Watwood to hustle across the plate with the winning run.

With both pitchers having an effective day, no one on either team was particularly successful at the plate. Judge and Crowder got two hits apiece off Moore, each getting a single and a double, while singles by Manush and Hayes constituted the remainder of the Washington offensive.

Watwood beat out a roller and got a triple off Crowder and Barnes two singles, Cissell, Reynolds, Appling and Tate contributing the other singles that went to make up the White Sox total.

Aside from the tenth, the second was the only inning in which there were developments of importance.

Cronin Scores Only Run for Nats.

The Nats went into their one-run lead when Cronin walked to open the second session, Judge beat out a grounder to shortstop that sent Cronin to second, and Harris bunted to

Pirates Jolt Giants By Double Triumph

New York, Sept. 14 (A.P.).—The Pittsburgh Pirates reduced the Giants' chances of taking the National League pennant to almost nothing today by winning both games of a double-header, 8 to 6 and 7 to 3. The first game went ten innnigs while the second was called at the end of the seventh because of darkness.

The double defeat put the Giants five and one-half games behind the Brooklyn Robins, today's league leaders, with only twelve games to go.

After scoring six runs in the fourth inning of the opener, the Pirates allowed the Giants to tie the score as their infield played badly, but Glenn Spencer relieved Ray Kremer and pitched shutout ball for the last two innings to get credit for the victory. He also drove in the winning run. Bool's home run with two on base topped the big Pittsburgh rally.

By AL MUNRO ELIAS (Famous Statistician).

UNLESS John McGraw's Giants do a sudden right-about-face at the last moment, it looks as though the ranking first baseman of the game will have to wait at least another year before displaying his wares in baseball's blue ribbon classic. Bill Terry's sensational play throughout the current season has stamped him as one of the greatest guardians of the initial sack the pastime has ever known.

At the plate, Terry has been a tremendous power all year, and, unless he hits a terrific slump during the remaining three weeks, he is certain to win the batting crown of the senior loop. His average has hovered around the .400 mark constantly, and, at this writing, is 5 points over the magic figure. His 229 base hits have netted him a total of 355 bases, and include 36 doubles, 12 triples and 22 circuit smashes.

Afield, Terry is at once a flashy and dependable performer. One hundred and eleven assists in 137 games attest to his skill at covering ground. By way of comparison, Jimmy Foxx has but 69 assists to his credit in 139 games.

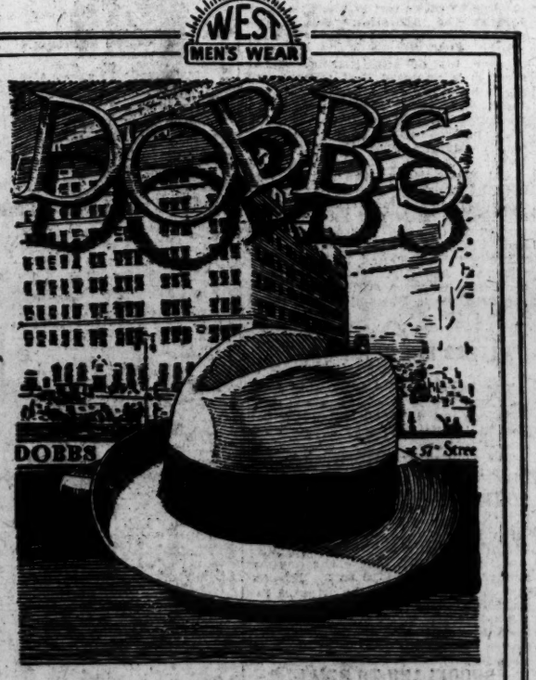

Terry Trails in Only Two Departments.

Only in two departments, home runs and runs batted in, does Terry fail to surpass his rivals, and in each case he is in the runner-up position, with Foxx showing the way. Foxx has driven out 33 homers, and has sent 139 runs scampering across the plate, as against 22 four-ply clouts and 119 runs batted in for Terry.

Foxx and Judge, the American League possibilities among the first basemen, rank next to Terry at bat. A year ago this time Connie Mack's youngster was hitting at a .365 clip. But while his average has dropped off some 30 points, Jimmie has proved more valuable to his team this season in that he has driven home 139 runs against 117 at a corresponding time last year.

The Cubs offer the ever reliable Charley Grimm and Long George Kelly as first sackers. Grimm, the Cub captain, is the Stuffy McInnis of the

HAVRE DE GRACE PREPARES FOR BANNER MEETING

Three Stakes Of $20,000 Offered

Major Track to Open Sept. 23; Whitney Sends Stars.

Crack Group of 51 Is Named for Long Cup Handicap.

Special to The Washington Post.

HAVRE DE GRACE, Md., Sept. 14.—Trainer T. J. Healey, head trainer of the Harry Payne Whitney string, will bring a powerful band here for the fall meeting of the Harford Agricultural and Breeders Association, beginning Tuesday, September 23.

Equipoise, one of the year's outstanding 2-year-olds; Magnifico, Marplot, Pansette, Pennate, Peter Polly and Thias all youngsters whose speed have been tested will be the main hopes of Trainer Healey to lead the list of wininng trainers here.

That the Whitney thoroughbreds will have capable pilots, there is no questioning, as Trainer Healey is sending Sonny Workman, Albert Robertson and R. Ingersoll here to handle his charges. Workman is the year's outstanding rider, and his services will be in great demand during the approaching meeting.

Crack Stables to Ship Horses.

Victor Emanuel, who races under the nom de course of the Dorwood Stable; Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt's Fair Stable and Samuel D. Riddle's Glen Riddle Farm's thoroughbreds will also be seen in action here, as their owners have applied to General Manager Edward Burke for stalls.

J. P. (Sammy) Smith, who handles the Dorwood Stable's horses, is pointing High Day, speedy 2-year-old son of High Time—Tia Juana, for the $20,000 Potomac Handicap, 6 furlong race, exclusively for 2-year-olds, on Saturday, September 27.

The session here will mark the first Maryland appearance of Willie Midgely as trainer of the Glen Riddle Farm's horses. Midgely, who has had fine success the past summer with his new charges, is pointing Full Dress, black son of Man o' War—Shady, for the $20,000 Handicap, at mile and one-sixteenth event set for Thursday, September 25.

Stalls for 1,300 Horses.

Many of the prominent American and Canadian establishments are now heading for this picturesque course on the banks of the Susquehanna River, and all signs point to a capacity colony of 1,300 thoroughbreds being on hand before the meeting opens.

General Manager Burke is of the opinion that his meeting, which will see a trio of $20,000 stakes being run, will prove the best ever offered here. It is seldom that trainers get a chance to shoot at such valuable purses over a period of eleven days, and they are not backward in sending their aces on for the sport.

Fifty-one of the best distance runners on this side of the Atlantic have been nominat d for the $20,000 Havre de Grace (Cup) Handicap, a mile and one-eighth race to be run here October 4, getaway day.

William Woodward, master of the famous Blair stud, has not named Gallant Fox for the cup test. However, Mr. Woodward has nominated Frisius, one that ran second to Gallant Fox in the Saratoga Cup, a mile and three-quarter test staged on Saturday, August 30, at the Spa.

Misstep, looked upon as the West's best handicap horse, will carry the Le Mar Stock Farm's silks in the cup test. The Mount Royal Stable's Marine, king of the handicap stars in Canada, will also start in the cup test, which makes it look at this writing as if the best race of the meeting will result.

This year's renewal of the cup event is the nineteenth. Some great horses, including Adams Express, Roamer, The Finn, Cudgel, The Porter, Omar Khayyam, Crusader, Chance Play, Osmand and Sun Beau, have been winners of the cup, and this year's winner should not suffer in comparison.

The Glen Riddle Farm's Crusader, with 122 pounds up and ably handled by Earle Sande, ran the mile and one-eighth in 1:50 in 1926. That is the fastest time ever hung out for the cup test here, but if the track is fast on October 4, Crusader's figures may be erased from the record books.

—Lincoln Fields Selections—

By J. B. SNODGRASS

LINCOLN FIELDS has an attractive Monday card and the feature, the Sunflower Purse, a mile and a sixteenth, should be won by the Friar Rock horse JEM, which has galloped home first in his last four starts, defeating Ladrone in his last, a mile and a sixteenth in 1:44 3-5. Consistency of horses is rarely more pronounced than in this horse, which has lost two races in ten starts. The mare FLECHE D'ARGENT, winner last week in Chicago, and also a Saratoga winner, should be the contender. TYPHOON has a chance. He beat VICTORIAN last week, which shows he is on edge. JEM is a fast track horse. A change in the track condition before post time to heavy would give TYPHOON a better chance.

FIRST RACE—This is for 2-year-old maiden fillies. VERY WELL should win it. She beat a good field, headed by DEALER, losing the race through disqualification. This filly is by Bunting, and races in the colors of John J. Coughlin, of Bath-House fame. HAPPY HOLIDAY has just missed in two of her races, and is due for brackets soon. REGAL LADY has a chance. She ran second to ALFAYE B.

SECOND RACE—J. W. Parrish's STOCK MARKET should win the second. He has not been out of the money but once in ten starts. By Luke McLuke, sire also of Anita Peabody, this 3-year-old is just a shade below stake quality. FLAG TIME and BLOT are regarded as most dangerous of his rivals. BLOT is owned by H. P. Whitney, and is by Peter Pan. His last winning race was over Banner Bright.

THIRD RACE—In the third race ALFAYE B., referred to in getting a line on the 2-year-olds above, stands out over her field. She beat REGAL LADY in her last race and takes off weight. MISS COMET is a coming filly and should be the contender on her recent victory over Scala. TRANSGRESSION has beaten juveniles like SPRING CLEANING and WATER PORT.

FOURTH RACE—Edward Prichard's TANNERY looks much the best in the fourth race. This son of Ballot has been coming out, beating Collođen and Reveille Boy in his last start, and has given other evidences that he was of the class that should be in a derby, although he proved a flop against Gallant Fox. TANNERY is a good horse and is improving. He should beat CULLODEN again. BEST MAN, a better horse than he has shown recently, conqueror of Black Watch in New York, looks dangerous. His best recent race was second to Eskimo.

SIXTH RACE—LOCKET is put on to win the sixth race and her form is very consistent except for her last two races. She can win today if she runs back to her best. SCHLAF WOHL appears to be coming on to winning form. BOLODORO has a chance for third money.

SEVENTH RACE—ROYAL MANAGER is selected in the seventh race. He beat the sort he meets today in his last start. MY NO and DELMONICO appear to be the contenders in a large field.

5,000 CROWD EXPECTED AT BOUTS

McKenna - Raymond in Feature at Ft. Wash. Tonight.

PROVIDED the weather is favorable, a crowd of 5,000 is anticipated tonight at Fort Washington, Md., for the weekly fight show of the Front Line Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars. The first of the six bouts is scheduled to start promptly at 8:30 o'clock.

Since the last show, Fort Washington officials have increased the seating capacity of the arena. About 1,500 seats have been added. The arena was filled to capacity last Monday night and many fans who arrived late had to stand.

Latona-Marchyn, Burns-Lavine In Preliminaries.

Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn last night announced the completion of the card with the arrangement of two four-round preliminaries. Roma Latona, of the Mohawk Club, will swap blows with Mike Marchyn, of Fort Washington, in one of the prelims, while Sammy Burns, of Walter Reed Hospital, will engage Kid Lavine, of the Mohawks, in the other.

Three eight-round bouts and one six are also on the program. The probable feature is the clash between Sailor McKenna, of the Mohawks, and Phil Raymond, the leader of the fighting Raymond brothers, of Baltimore. McKenna has defeated Phil's brothers, Lou and Joe, so the bout is quite likely to develop into a fierce battle with Phil trying to avenge the beatings his rival administered to his brothers.

Eddie Buell, popular veteran bantamweight, formerly of the Mohawks, will return after a successful fight last week, to meet Ray Legacy, of Fredericksburg, Va. This tussle is one of the eight-rounders.

Strickler Tackles Bass In 8-Rounder.

Billy Strickler, of this city, will oppose Sylvan Bass, Baltimore's latest welterweight sensation, in the other eight-round affair, while Tony Cortez, who is making a comeback in local ring circles after two years' absence, will take on Clarence Slohe, of Baltimore, for six rounds.

Fans desiring to make the trip to the fort by water may be accommodated on a boat which will leave the Eighth and N streets southwest wharf at 7 p. m. A fare of 50 cents will be charged for the round trip. The fort also may be reached by automobile on the main road through Congress Heights.

move them both up another base. Hayes lifted a long fly to center field that brought Cronin home with Washington's only run of the game and Hargrave ended the inning by flying to left field.

Barnes cracked a clean single to short center field to open the Sox half of the second inning. Luke Appling lifted another single over first base to send Barnes to third, and then after Kamm had flied to left Tate sent a long fly to Manush which permitted Barnes to come home after the catch with the tying run.

In the final game of the series, which will mark Washington's last appearance here this season, Jones is the likely pitching candidate, with Ted Lyons slated to face him.

third lost by Ferrell in a row after he had won thirteen straight victories.

The game started off with a homer in the first by Dykes. Simmons also hit a homer in the seventh, scoring Cochrane ahead of him.

The crowd was estimated at 22,000.

Big Sunday Golf Program Staged on District Courses

Miller, Herbert Lacey Tied for Manor Medal in Club Title Play—Results of Events at Other Clubs.

By HENRY LITCHFIELD WEST.

A SERIES of events at many of the local golf clubs yesterday attracted large fields, the principal competition being for qualification in clubs' championships. At the Manor Club George F. Miller and Herbert L. Lacey tied for the medal, the former with a score of 40—38—78 and the latter with 39—39—78.

At the Argyle Club William P. DiEste led the field with 38—35—73, one stroke ahead of Robert Bowen, the District junior champion, who, however, was penalized by a stroke for an out-of-bounds shot and finished with 37—37—74.

Lacey Leads With 78 at Indian Spring.

At the Indian Spring Club H. L. Lacey was first with a score of 37—41—78, but, as the remainder of the week will be devoted to a qualifying round, this card is not necessarily the final winner.

The Washingtonians came from behind to score three runs in the ninth of the first game. Joe DiNenna hurled a 5-hit game for the Capital City boys in the second clash.

TERRY RATED BEST OF FIRST BASEMEN

National League. Like Stuffy, he is almost a perfect fielder. He offers a fine target for the Bruin infielders to throw at, and he is perhape the surest catch of a thrown ball in the game today. Five errors in more than 1,000 chances prove how rarely Grimm slips.

Grimm Expected to Be Ready.

Last year Charley was injured near the close of the season, but returned in time to prove one of the Cub stars against the Athletics. Again this year he has been out of the game recently, with George Kelly doing a capable bit of substituting. Howeved, it is expected that Grimm will again be ready for the series in the event the Cubs hang on to their present lead; and again you can expect perfect fielding and steady, timely hitting from the Cub field leader.

Del Bissonette, of the Robins, and Jim Bottomley, of the Cards, the remaining two National League possibilities, are both .300 hitters. Bottomley to date has just managed to keep his nose in the charmed circle, while the Dodger first sacker is hitting at a .330 clip. Bissonette, however, has proved a trifle unsteady in the field, while Bottomley is as reliable as ever.

NET CHOICES ADVANCE AT WARDMAN

Seeded Players Win As Expected—Good Matches Today.

WITH the exception of Commander C. C. Gill and Thomas "Bud" Markey, who by their failure to appear were defaulted, the seeded players advanced yesterday in the men's singles division of the Wardman Park invitation tennis tournament on the Wardman courts.

Dooly Mitchell, defending champion, seeded first, easily marched into the third round by defeating Robert Tracey, 6—1, 6—3, and Frederick Dodge, 6—4, 6—4, while Eddie Yeomans, seeded fourth, made the same advance, conquering Stanley Thompson, 6—4, 6—4, and William H. Callan, 3—6, 6—2, 6—2.

Considine, Mangan Win Handily.

Commander Gill sent word from New York, where he had been playing in the national veterans' tournament, that he could not possibly return here in time to play. Markey, who is in Indianapolis, notified officials that he could not appear until Tuesday. He is expected to participate in the doubles which will start Wednesday.

Bob Considine, District of Columbia champion, seeded No. 2, played only one match, winning this in handy fashion from Gene Hermann, 6—1, 6—1. Tom Mangan, former District title holder, seeded No. 3, likewise advanced, beating Robert Boyd, 6—1, 6—0.

Maurice O'Neill, seeded seventh, narrowly escaped elimination at the hands of Sidney Wallenstein, a comparative unknown, who forced him to the limit before bowing, 5—7, 7—5, 8—6. Colin Stam, last on the seeded list, turned back Philip Herrick, 6—1, 6—3.

Frederico Sendel, of the Mexican Davis Cup Team, who was not seeded, battled Tom Mills into submission by 6—1, 10—8. Frank Shore, District junior champion, advanced to the third round, defeating Ed Becker, 6—3, 6—0, and Harry Hill, 6—3, 6—3. Gilbert Hunt, runner-up for the District boys' championship, downed A. A. Varela, 6—0, 6—1.

Staubly, Burke Also Go To Third Round.

Others who went into the third round with two victories each were Alan Staubly, of George Washington University, and Everett Burke, former all-around athletic star of Western High School and Washington and Lee University. Staubly subdued A. A. Tomelden in the first round, 6—2, 7—5, and disposed of Bill Buchanan in the second, 8—6, 6—0. Burke eliminated Heimberger in the first, 6—2, 6—3, and put out H. Ritzenberg in the second, 6—4, 7—5.

In the more attractive matches scheduled today, Alex Keiles, Baltimore public parks champion, will engage Donald Morrison, of this city, who reached the quarter-finals of the national junior tournament, and the youngster, Hunt, whose game is improving by leaps and bounds, will oppose the veteran Stam.

Women's play is included in today's program. Entries for the men's doubles will close tonight at 6 o'clock, and entries for the women's doubles will close tomorrow at the same hour.

EAGLES AND TIGERS WIN IN CAPITAL CITY SERIES

BAUSERMANS LOSE, 3 TO 2; DIXIE PIGS DROP OPENER, 7 TO 3

Hughes' Hurling Features Victory of Takoma Nine.

THE Takoma Tigers, Montgomery County champions, turned in a victory in their first start in the Capital City League's intersectional playoff when they defeated the Dixie Pigs, Prince Georges County champions, 7-3, in a well-played game before some 700 rooters at the Byrd Stadium, University of Maryland.

Dick Hughes, who for a long time was something of a "Frank Merriwell" on the sandlots, but later seemed to lose his stuff, came back to the sandlot wars yesterday to hurl one of his brilliant games for the Tigers.

At that, Hughes made a shaky start, the Dixie Pigs getting away to a 3-0 lead in the first two innings, but thereafter Dick burned them down the alley to hold the Pigs scoreless. In all, Hughes allowed only five hits and fanned six batters.

Adair Starts Well On Mound.

Blackie Adair started on the mound for the Prince Georges County champions, and from the form he showed in the first three innings it looked like a sad day for the Tigers. Adair had the Takoma boys breaking their backs swinging at the ball.

He coudl not hold the pace, however. When Hughes started to settle down, Adair seemed to lose his grip on the ball. The Tigers got to him for a run in the fourth and another in the fifth.

The Takoma crew went into the lead in the sixth with two runs. The run that sent them ahead was the result of a squeeze play with Henley's bunt scoring Rosser. Adair got by the seventh, but the eighth saw his exit. The attack which brought Babe Clapper to the hill was culminated by a double by Henley which drove in two tallies.

Stahl and Watts played stellar games afield for the Pigs. Stahl handled nine chances, making two putouts and seven assists. Watts had twelve chances at second.

Henley, James and Baker led the attack for the Tigers, each making three hits.

The Tigers meet the Bausermans on the Silver Spring Field next Sunday at 2:15 o'clock.

Goodwyn Wins Hill Duel With Hull at Congress Heights.

CATCHER ALVIN DAVIS batted the Anacostia Eagles, District section champions, to a 3-to-2 victory over the Bauserman Motor Co., Virginia section champions, yesterday in the first Capital City League play-off game for both clubs. While there were other heroes on both teams, it was Davis that provided the punch that scored all the Eagle runs.

The game was a pitchers' battle from start to finish between C. A. Hull, of Bauserman, and Jimmy Goodwyn, of the Eagles. Hull allowed six hits and fanned five batters, while Goodwyn yielded seven hits and sent back eight by the stroke-out route.

The Bausermans scored the first run of the game in the fourth frame, and added another in the sixth, to make the situation look dark for the Anacostia Club.

Eagles Tie Score In Seventh.

The Eagles tied the count, however, in the seventh. Tom Sweeney led off his second double of the game. Wahler grounded out. Sugrue walked but Wesley forced him, Sweeney taking third on the play. With the count two and two, Davis lashed a double down the third-base line, Sweeney and Wesley scoring.

Neither club scored in the eighth. The Eagles won the game in the ninth.

Sugrue walked and Wesley singled. Both runners advanced when a throw to catch Wesley off first was muffed. Davis then came through with a long fly and Sugrue trotted home with the winning run.

Sweeney, with his brace of doubles and a walk in four trips to the plate, led the Eagles' attack. Ritnour and Wormsley got two hits each for the Virginians.

Wormesley turned in the best catch of the day with a one-handed stab over his head to pull down a long fly.

The Eagles will travel to Byrd Stadium, at the University of Maryland, next Sunday to meet the Dixie Pigs, Prince Georges County champions.

10-Run Seabrook Rally Beats Bowie Motors

Seabrook A. C. Nine went to bat in the seventh inning of yesterday's game against Bowie A. C. on the short end of a 12-3 score, when Rector's single started a rally that sent ten runs scurrying across the plate. Seabrook scored twice in the eighth, and although Bowie threatened in its last chance at bat, Seabrook got home leading, 15-13.

Long, of the winners, proved the bright star of the game. Relieving Trainmell in the fifth session, he held the slugging Bowiemen to three scattered bingles.

Bobby Jones in Exhibition At Columbia Tomorrow

Macdonald Smith to Play in Benefit 4-Ball Match.

BOBBY JONES.

FROM present indications a crowd of several thousand interested golfers will throng the course of the Columbia Club tomorrow afternoon to witness the four-ball match in which Robert T. "Bobby" Jones will be paired with Roland Mackenzie against Macdonald Smith and Fred McLeod, the Columbia Club professional. Jones will arrive tomorrow morning and the quartet of players will be entertained at luncheon at the Columbia Club prior to the exhibition.

While the match is for the benefit of Bob McWatt, former golf professional at the old Columbia Golf Club, who has been a helpless cripple for the past two years as the result of an automobile accident, the fact that "Bobby" Jones, who is now the holder of twelve major championships, will appear in person will be the magnet which will draw the crowd.

Arrangements for parking automobiles, policing, ticket selling, &c., have been made under the joint direction of George P. James, chairman of the golf committee of the Columbia Club, and A. F. Bergman, secretary-treasurer of the Middle Atlantic Professional Golfers Association, under whose auspices the exhibition will be conducted.

The tickets of admission will be sold for $2 and the match will commence at 2 o'clock.

$2.95

A handbag as flat as a pancake . . . as lack luster as dull-finish calf can be . . . a trifle larger, too, than bags of this type were last season.

That's why this very keen-looking bag is as smart as the hilarious magazine of the same name.

And not the least of its charms is its very, very low price!

PROPOSALS

OFFICE OF THE EXECUTIVE OFFICER, Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission, Navy Building, Washington, D. C. Sealed bids will be received in this office until 11 a. m. (Eastern standard time), SEPTEMBER 17, 1930, and then publicly opened in Room 1613, Navy Building, for doing the grading work of the Parkway to the Memorial Entrance to the Cemetery of the Arlington Memorial Bridge project, involving about 110,000 cubic yards of earth excavation. Further information upon application. 9,10,15

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR, Washington, D. C., September 9, 1930. Sealed bids in duplicate, subject to the conditions contained herein, will be received until 2 p. m., Tuesday, October 7, 1930, and then opened for (1) Furnishing all labor and materials for performing all work for the construction (including all mechanical equipment) of Building No. 1, and for the buildings Nos. 2 and 3 of the women's dormitory group at Howard University, Washington, D. C. This work will include excavating, reinforced concrete construction, brickwork, stone work, floor and wall tile, miscellaneous iron and steel work, slate and metal roofing, lathing and plastering, carpentry, electric elevators, plumbing, heating, electrical installation, finish grading, concrete walks and landscaping. (2) Kitchen equipment, furniture, shades, draperies, &c., furnished and installed. Proposals will be considered only from individuals, firms or corporations possessing satisfactory financial and technical ability, equipment and organization to insure speedy completion of the contract, and in making awards the records of bidders for expedition and satisfactory performance on contracts of similar character and magnitude will be carefully considered. Separate and distinct appropriations having been made for dormitory No. 1 and for dormitories Nos. 2 and 3, it will be necessary, in order to avoid any violation of sections 3678 and 3733 of the revised statutes, to invite bids and enter into contracts which will specify the consideration for dormitory No. 1 separate and apart from the consideration for dormitories Nos. 2 and 3. As contractors may be able to make a better price to the Government if assured of the contract for the whole three buildings, there is no objection to having bidders submit bids for the two projects separately and, also, to state bid prices respectively for the two projects based on an award for all three buildings. It is desired that these buildings be completed at the earliest practicable date and therefore time will be considered an element in awarding such contracts. At the discretion of the Secretary, drawings and specifications may be obtained upon application to the department. A certified check in the sum of $100 payable to the Treasurer of the United States is required as security for safe return of the drawings and specifications within ten days after the date of opening proposals. Each bidder must accompany his proposal with detailed financial statement of his construction organization. The Government reserves the right to reject any or all bids or waive technical defects. The Government also reserves the right to award the contracts for these buildings either as separate contracts for each of the two projects to separate bidders, or as separate contracts for the two projects combined under one bid to one bidder. Envelopes containing bids must be sealed, marked "Bid for construction, equipment and furnishing of women's dormitory building 1 and buildings 2 and 3, Howard University, Washington, D. C., to be opened October 7, 1930," and addressed to "The Secretary of Interior, Room 6119, Interior Department Building, Washington, D. C." JOHN H. EDWARDS, Assistant Secretary of Interior. 15,16,17

NEWS OF LATEST HAPPENINGS IN MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA

LOAN COMMITTEE NAMED IN FAIRFAX

$2,000 Allotted by Government for Needs of Farmer in This County.

VIENNA HEADS TO MEET

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST, P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va. Phone Clarendon 2324-W-2.

F. S. McCandlish, James U. Kincheloe and Edgar Littleton have been appointed a subcommittee of the Fairfax County drought relief committee to pass on the applications of farmers applying for small loans for seed and fertilizer for fall plantings.

The requests for these loans must be in the hands of the county agricultural agent before September 20. After an investigation by the district committee they will be acted upon by the subcommittee who must forward them to the Federal Government prior to the time limit that has been set as September 25.

The Federal Government has allotted $2,000 toward the needs of the Fairfax County farmer and this is available only for the purchase of seeds and fertilizers to be used this fall. Applications for loans can be made by farmers who by failure or crop losses do not have money for this purpose. These loans can only be made to those who are without money or bank credit to make the purchase. No loans for seed and fertilizer can be made in excess of $200 and the maximum amount per acre is $5. Where no fertilizer is needed $100 is the largest amount that can be borrowed. The applicants must agree to use the seed and methods approved by the United States Department of Agriculture. These applications must be made on an official form which can be secured from the county agent. The notes must be made payable on or before July 1, 1931, and bear an interest rate of 5 per cent annually.

County Drought Relief Chairman Edmund H. Allen has reported that all railroads passing through the county have signified their willingness to provide water tank cars, but the drought committee would have to pay for having them cleaned. Chairman Allen reports that this cost would be small. The cost of operating the large railroad tank cars would be approximately $7.50 freight charges for each 15 miles. The cost of the water itself would be approximately 30 cents per 1,000 gallons. These large tanks would be used for hauling water from Washington or Alexandria along the local freight lines. They would make stops at local stations, where they would fill smaller tank wagons. Representative R. Walton Moore is negotiating with the Federal Government for the use of similar tanks throughout the county if such assistance becomes necessary.

County Agent H. B. Derr reports that to date almost 500 carloads of hay and feed have been brought into the county on the reduced freight rate schedule. Mr. Derr also states that he is running an employment agency in his office at Fairfax, to assist persons in the county who have been affected by the drought.

There will be a special meeting of the Vienna Town Council this evening in the town hall. The report of the town sergeant, W. E. Thompson, who has been making a house to house canvass in the town to ascertain the number of dry wells and if the citizens would patronize a water delivery system, will be the special order of business. The plan calls for the delivery of water to the households in the town for approximately 25 cents a barrel. The water would be delivered by the town truck, provided that a sufficient number of patrons can be obtained.

The Northwest Citizens Association of the town of Falls Church will hold its meeting this evening at the home of its president, Mrs. R. E. Kendrick.

The night branch of the ladies' auxiliary of the Episcopal Church at Falls Church will start a stationary drive today to continue for this week. The drive will be under the direction of Mrs. E. B. Stiff and Miss Bessie Stewart.

The Epworth League of the Southern Methodist Church at Falls Church will hold a get-together lawn social this evening at the home of Miss Mary Birch, on Broad street.

The Community Club at Groveton will hold its meeting tomorrow evening in the schoolhouse. The completion of the club's reorganization of its by-laws will be the special order of business. They also plan to elect a president to succeed the late Capt. George K. Pickett.

Prof. R. C. Haydon and Prof. J. C. Pullen, both of Manassas, and the Rev. J. M. Beall, of Sterling, Va., will act as the judges of the silver medal oratorical contest that will be held this evening at 8 o'clock in the Baptist Church at Herndon under the auspices of the Herndon Chapter, Women's Christian Temperance Union. Those taking part in the contest are: Miss Katherine Dugger, Miss Julio DeButts, Miss Emily Robb, Miss Catherine Steele, Virginia Thompson, Lytton Linkins and Howard Thornsberry.

The Farmers and Mechanics Council, Order of Fraternal Americans, at Andrew Chapel will hold its meeting tomorrow evening in the auditorium of the Andrew Chapel School.

Vernon Corey Also Gets Honors in Audition at Theater.

Special to The Washington Post.

Easton, Md., Sept. 14.—Miss Isabel McCoy, of Rising Sun, Md., won first place here this afternoon in the annual Atwater Kent audition contest for this section in competition with seven other young women. Vernon Corey, of Chestertown, won first honors among the nine male contestants.

The contest was held in the new theater, which was packed to capacity. The judges were unknown to both singers and audience, the only information given out being that they lived outside of Easton and one came from another State.

The selections met with the approval of the audience. Senator W. Erle Withgott announced the numbers of the singers and acted as chairman of the committee in charge, which also included Mrs. Cleveland Smith, Miss Eleanor Hughes and W. W. Spence.

Pen 13 Is Ahead In Egg-Laying Test

Runner-Up Takes Lead in Maryland University Contest.

Special to The Washington Post.

College Park, Md., Sept. 14.—The forty-fifth week of the egg-laying contest conducted by the University of Maryland Experiment Station was a lucky one for the pen marked 13, belonging to L. R. Douglas, Kinsale, Va., for this runner-up pen not only took the lead in the entire contest with a total of 2,343 eggs, but also tied for high weekly honors wiht 48 eggs. The Mount Hope Farm entry from Williamstown, Mass., slippd back to second place with 2,336 eggs, and the pen of John Lynch, Mansfield, Conn., with 2,301 eggs, was awarded third honors. Fourth position was given to the ten birds belonging to Hoch's Pedigree Breeding Farm, Williamstown, N. J., with 2,286 eggs. All are leghorns.

Rate of production turned downward during the week, when a total of 3,009 eggs were produced by the competing birds, lowering the contest average for the seven days to 42.97 per cent. This figure represents a drop of 5.57 points from the previous week. Total production to the present time is 182,237 eggs, or 182.2 eggs per bird, a figure considerably in excess of all previous Maryland contests with the exception of the 1929-30 contest, when the average lay was 1.66 eggs higher.

The high individual hen for the contest is bird No. 1 in the pen of Ehmann Poultry Farm, Allison Park, Pa. She made a score of six eggs the week and her total to date is 278 eggs.

INDUSTRIALISM SEEN AS SOUTHERN BOON

Virginia Quarterly Writer Takes Issue With View of Traditionalists.

JEFFERSON IS QUOTED

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 14 (A.P.). Stringfellow Barr, editor-elect of the Virginia Quarterly Review, says in an issue to be circulated tomorrow that southern traditionalists regard the growing tide of industrialism below the Mason-Dixon line as producing a social and economic dilemma but offers his own opinion that the South faces a brilliant chance for an industrial experiment that will prove its economic salvation.

He quotes the descendants of the Southern ruling class, whom he calls the traditionalists, as believing the South "must either accept industrialism and lose its soul, or reject it and remain in helotry."

Instead of taking this gloomy view, Mr. Barr says if the traditionalists really care about the culture of the older South they will discover a method for adapting the new industrialism to the demands of industrializing the society.

Industrialism, like disease, he says, eventually finds its antitoxin and adds, if industrialism is a disease, then the South already has it.

The university's founder, Thomas Jefferson, is quoted in support of Mr. Barr's assertion. The traditionalist, he says, "is right in his Jeffersonian intuition. That industrialism produces more dangerous social problems than agriculture diseases, but he is unaware of Jefferson's later conclusion that industry must be tamed and put to decent uses.

Mr. Barr, professor of history at the University of Virginia, becomes editor of the quarterly revenue on October 1. He succeeds James Southall Wilson, professor of English, who founded the publication six years ago.

Forgery Sends Youth Back to Reform School

Special to The Washington Post.

Winchester, Va., Sept. 14.—George Cone, 19, Riverton, Va., paroled three months ago from a State reform school, returned there today in charge of a guard, after being convicted here of forging the name of J. J. Sullivan to two checks, one of which he had cashed. He was presenting another to a jeweler when the latter asked him to remain temporarily until he should ascertain whether the check was genuine.

As Cone left and walked briskly up a street he was recognized by a shoe merchant, who had cashed a $20 check and policemen caught him. Cone admitted the charges. He was sent to the State school several years ago on a similar charge.

Baltimore Man Held in Murder

Rufus Dodson Is Accused of Slaying Madison Storekeeper.

Special to The Washington Post.

Culpeper, Va., Sept. 14.—A warrant, formally charging Rufus Dodson, of Baltimore, with the murder of William H. Strother, in Madison County three weeks ago, was issued by authorities of that county today and Dodson will be moved from the Culpeper County jail, where he has been held for two weeks, to Madison Courthouse tomorrow.

Strother, who operated a small store on the road to the President's Rapidan fishing lodge, was found dead behind the counter of his store on August 26, after having been missing for nearly 36 hours. Three bullet wounds in his body and an empty wallet at his side were the clues to the manner and motive of his murder.

One week later Sergt. P. L. Thornton, and Inspector F. N. Utz, of the State motor vehicle police, arrested Dodson in possession of a car allegedly stolen in Maryland and he was lodged in the local jail. A check up revealed that the car fitted the description of one seen in the woods near Strother's store about the time of the murder and bond was set at a high figure while officers made further investigation which led to the issuance of the warrant today. Other evidence uncovered by the authorities has not yet been revealed.

Missing Girl Back, Police Seek Man

Baltimore Girl Returns, but Mystery Veils Recent Whereabouts.

Catherine Zimmerman, 18-year-old Baltimore governess, who disappeared from her home last Thursday, returned early yesterday and police immediately began a search for the man who is said to have been her companion during the period of her disappearance.

Lieut. William B. Dorsey, of the Baltimore County police, interviewed the girl upon her reappearance and announced that he would make an arrest. He would not reveal the identity of the man or upon what charge he hoped to arrest him.

Trio Broadcasts Bogus Currency in Maryland

Special to The Washington Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 14.—Three men traveling in a big auto bearing North Carolina licenses tags, visited western Maryland during Saturday afternoon and night, spending counterfeit twenty-dollar bills. At least a score of victims have been found. The bills were given in payment for merchandise and it is feared that when the banks open tomorrow, many more of the spurious bills will turn up.

A number of merchants and oil stations in Hagerstown and Funkstown, along the Washington highway were recipients of the bills. A Department of Justice operative arrived here today and took up the trail which led through Frederick in the direction of Washington at one time.

Will of God Is Text Of Rev. H. W. Snyder

Family and Spiritual Relationships Taken In Comparison.

THE REV. H. W. SNYDER.

The Rev. Henry W. Snyder, pastor of St. Paul's English Lutheran Church, speaking yesterday at the Metropolitan Theater, where his congregation is meeting pending the erection of a new church at Connecticut avenue and Ellicott street, took as his text Mark iii:35: "For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother and sister and mother." His sermon follows:

"One evening as a father and mother were walking past the church and Sabbath school which they attended, their little boy looked up at the building, and then turning to the parents, asked the significant question: 'Aren't we related to this church?' That child-like way of putting the question was in our estimation a most complimentary comment on the parents; it indicated that early were they teaching him the value of the church and God in his life. I should like to ask, and then try to answer, an even more important question: 'Are we related to Christ?'

"What do you honestly think of your family, its present members, its forbears? Have you ever wished that you had been born into some other family? Does family or heredity make any difference to you A mere stripling was standing before his king, receiving the praises of the sovereign for having done a piece of work that not even the whole army of the land had been able to accomplish. As David stood before King Saul, the latter asks a question: 'Whose son art thou, thou young man?' Secular literature furnishes us with a similar illustration in the play of "'As You Like it,' by Shakespeare, when the usurping duke asks the fine young wrestler as to his parentage. Blood tells; heredity is one of the factors that enters into the making up of our character. I sometimes wonder what Jesus thought of his family; Scriptures indicate that his whole attitude was one of kindly helpfulness. But at first the feeling was hardly mutual, for we read that some of the members did not believe in Him; worse than that, they thought He was mad. The very fact that they came to Him at this time was if possible to save Him from His enemies and from Himself, for He had in His seeming madness provoked influential leaders. Hence, out of solicitude for His welfare, His family would take Him away. When Jesus was told that they have come for Him, He looks round about on His disciples and makes the statement: 'Who is my mother and who are my brethren?' Then He proceeds to answer His own question in the words of the text, 'He that doeth the will of God;' or to bring out more strongly the family idea, Matthew words it, 'He that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother.'

Example of Abraham.

"In the physical world in which we live relationships are physical. My mother or father, sister or brother, are blood relatives; in the family of God, however, the relationship is spiritual. In one of his epistles John says: 'For as many as are led by the spirit of God they are sons of God.' In order to be related to Christ, we must have the spirit of Christ. One reads the expression in Scriptures concerning the children of Abraham, which does not mean necessarily physical descendants of the great patriarch. He was characterized by a great faith in God. In the face of all odds, he believed what God told him. It was contrary to nature, contrary to outlook, but God said it, and Abraham believed; therefore he was designated as the father of the faithful. Whenever any one displayed a similar faith, a kindred spirit to that of Abraham, he was designated as a son of that believer. Zaccheus, the little man who climbed into the tree to see Jesus, was called by the Master 'a son of Abraham.' The truth of this spiritual relationship is evidenced time and again among us. Often we are more closely related to our associates than to our blood relatives. And why? Because we have more in common with the former; our interests, our purposes, our ideals are the same. It is a strange and yet true fact that the same physical family will often have in it people of altogether different tastes, desires, ideals. It frequently happens that one member of a large family will be out of tune with all the others. As a result we look for those of kindred spirit with ourselves, and in spirit we are more closely related to these than to certain members of our own immediate household. Hence we can without any difficulty speak of the family of God, and Scripture does so; we may call each other brethren and sisters; we may speak of the church fathers.

"Just above we made the statement that blood tells; may we now make a parallel statement that blood tells. There are physical characteristics that persist; there are spiritual that do the same. And just as we recognize people by their physical resemblance to others, so may we tell the members of the family of God by certain outstanding marks. The text gives us what in Christ's mind was the principal of these—whosoever doeth the will of God, or whosoever doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven. The will of God, then, constitutes the ground of entrance into the family of God. The doing of the Father's will is the outward badge or evidence of the inward spirit. You can tell by this sign whether or not one belongs to the family of God, namely, is he doing the will of God? As Jesus would say, 'By their fruits shall ye know them.'

Compliance With God's Will.

"Now this is a logical test. It obtains in the physical world. The name 'family' implies physical relationship, but also unity of purpose. The family has a will, a purpose, an objective; and the best and happiest families are those where all are striving toward the same purpose. A house divided against itself can not stand. Father and mother achieve the most success in life where their purpose is one and the same. Children help in proportion to their willingness to realize that will or objective. In the family of God it is the will of the Father that constitutes the objective of every member. Jesus is the supreme example of perfect obedience to that will. Again and again does he refer to it; again and again does he set aside ase, comfort, preferment to do that will.

"'I am come to do Thy will, O God,' 'My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me,' and then think of that other sentiment of Christ. I believe that the greatest sentence in the world may be couched in just three short words, 'God is love;' but the second greatest is this: 'Thy will be done,' and this second may be confidently said because of the first.

"Now now are we going to convince the world of this great fact? How get men to do God's will? This, after all, is the supreme problem of the church. Christ taught His disciples to pray, 'Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done.' Those two petitions are related as cause and effect; when the will of God is done, His kingdom comes. In proportion as we are able to persuade ourselves and men to do the will of the Father, in that proportion is the kingdom coming. It is not an easy task. Different people may suggest various roads by which this goal is to be reached. May we give it as our view that the three Christian graces will help us in our progress?

Hope Through God.

"We must have faith in God and His plan for the world. Just as you do not invest your money in any scheme that does not challenge your belief, so you are not going to give yourself to the will of God unless you believe in Him and His plan for the universe. I must be convinced that God means by own good and that of my fellow men. When I can feel that I am ready to cast in my lot with His people, I am ready to join the family of God. We might spend much time in elaboration, in argument and appeal, but, after all, not human argument, but the convincing, convicting power of the Holy Spirit can bring me to a complete realization of this great purpose of the Divine.

"Then there must be hope through God. I must feel that the will of God is going to bring joy, peace, satisfaction and eternal life to me. I must be persuaded that in Him and His will lies my hope for this world and the next. My investment in secular affairs is with the hope that I may gain certain ends. The stocks and bonds, the insurance must promise me the hope of support in my declining years, the hope of help for my loved dependents. So in this spiritual relationship, the will of God must give me the hope of being a partaker in the joys and fruits of the harvest.

Heritage From Parents.

Thirdly, I must recognize the love of God for me, and that love will develop within me a reciprocal love for Him and a love for my fellowmen. The love of God—who can adequately express it? Its length, and depth, its height and breadth are past my apprehension. Let me but look at the Cross of Jesus Christ and there I find the consummate expression of the love of God for the world, myself included. If I can get that vision, there will be no question of my faith, nor any of my hope, but these must follow as the night the day.

"Finally, let us remember that the children inherit from the parents. The children of God receive the highest inheritance, even eternal life.

"Am I related to Christ? If I am, I shall be found doing the will of the Father, I shall be characterized by the spirit of Christ; with Him I shall inherit eternal life."

F Street Crowds Snicker As College Lad Sells Songs

Clad in red earrings, a lamp-black mustache, short trousers and red socks, and carrying a doll, a 17-year-old youth last night attempted to sell nickel song sheets in front of an F street theater. It was a fraternity initiation. Passersby gasped and snickered, according to their sophistication, and occasionally bought. The buyers no doubt, were intrigued by the pleadings of the lad that he had a wife and ailing child, obviously fictitious. In proof, he pushed the doll viciously in the solar plexus, and it wailed convincingly.

The youth was Saul Holtzman, of 610 C street northeast, a student at the University of Maryland. The occasion was the last day of his "goathood," before being admitted to the Phi Epsilon Tau Fraternity. The ordeal lasted an hour before he was permitted to forsake his post.

There is a rumor, unverified as yet, that an elderly inebriate, suddenly face to face with the phenomenon, swore off at once. It is a fact, however, that three nice old ladies stopped, admired the baby, questioned the proud father and bought copies of the "Pagan Love Song."

Holtzman, after his suffering, went home, changed his clothes and was regaled with a party at the Venus restaurant.

SMOKE SCREEN LAID TO PURSUED AUTOIST

Two Automobile Crashes Mark Chase of Suspected Rumrunner.

ANOTHER IS SOUGHT

Automobile crashes, followed by the arrest of a colored man, terminated a pursuit by police of an alleged rum car which last night raced through the northeast section of the city into Maryland aided by a smoke screen used by the occupants in an effort to evade capture.

The chase began at South Dakota and Rhode Island avenues, when the automobile passed a red traffic light. It ended in Mount Rainer, Md., when Patrolman Theodore Marquis captured one of the occupants after firing a shot into the air.

Marquis started after the automobile after it passed the light. He followed it through Myrtle avenue, to Central avenue and to Rhode Island avenue. As it started toward the Maryland line, the smoke screen was placed in operation. Marquis did not relent in his chase.

Near Baltimore pike the quarry car collided with a machine operated by Raymond Ransdall, of Mount Rainier, Md. Simultaneously, the police car struck a machine operated by Charles A. Dube, of Arlington, Va.

The occupants of the suspected car ran from the wreck. Marquis fired his gun into the air. Willie James, colored, of Third street near Q street northwest, said to have been one of the occupants, surrendered. The driver escaped. None of the cars were badly damaged.

Jones was taken before Justice of the Peace Moffatt at Hyattsville, where he was charged with operating a smoke screen. The police are searching for a man who is believed to have been operating the machine.

Grim Fight Waged By Mother Jones

Clings to Life by Slender Thread as Doctors Lose Hope.

Mary Jones, "Mother" Jones to the legions of friends in and out of the labor ranks in whose cause she attained national prominence as a militant leader, last night continued to linger on in a seemingly losing fight against death.

The 100-year-old campaigner, ill for the last eleven days at the residence of her hosts, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Burgess, on the Old Powder Mill road near Silver Spring, appeared a trifle weaker, despite the fact that she took a spoonful of cocoa as a more satisfactory substitute for small doses of brandy and morphine which have aided in keeping her alive during the last few days.

With hope for her recovery virtually abandoned, Mother Jones nevertheless may survive for a few days longer, but the end is very close, in the opinion of physicians. She has retained full possession of her faculties, and despite her infirmity was able to talk with friends upon occasions yesterday.

American Legion officials in Chattanooga announced that they were making arrangements to remove him from a hospital there to a veterans hospital in Memphis, Tenn., or Augusta, Ga.

Rintz walked into police headquarters in Chattanooga and asked police to "tell me where I am." Personal effects and a District tag on the automobile he was driving led to establishment of his identity. At a hospital he was found to be suffering from a complete temporary loss of memory.
